NAGEL FOR ARCH ON RIVERFRONT; STADIUM WOULD 'CHEAPEN' SITE

Warns Against Undercutting Original Plan — Wishes He 'Had Stock in Eiffel Tower.'

St. Louis must not let the riverfront memorial be cheapened by substitution of a baseball stadium or some other "utilitarian" feature for the inspiring Saarinen arch, Charles Nagel, director of the City Art Museum, declared yesterday.

He addressed the annual meeting of the League of Women Voters of St. Louis, which was held in the Old Courthouse on the memorial site.

While the meeting was in progress, President Eisenhower signed a bill appropriating $2,640,000 in federal funds for a start on the memorial.

"There is a lot of negative thinking on a project of this sort," Nagel declared. "We should be on guard against undercutting the original plan of development. I get tired of people saying the arch conceived by Eero Saarinen, the noted architect, is of no use.

"My answer is that I wish I had stock in the Eiffel Tower—it would still be paying off."

Symbolic of Gateway Role.

The arch, a span of stainless steel 590 feet high, would symbolize the role of St. Louis as a gateway to the West. This feature of the Saarinen design for the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial has evoked opposition in some quarters, and when Congress in 1954 authorized a federal contribution of $5,000,000 for the project, it specified that none of the federal funds may be used for the arch.

In his argument against the utilitarian approach, Nagel made a pointed reference to the Veterans' Memorial Bridge built by the City of East St. Louis five years ago.

"You used to be able to look at Eads Bridge and be sure of seeing an inspiring piece of engineering," he said. "Now what do you see? A very pedestrian piece of engineering peering above the bridge. The new span looks as if it were built upside down, and is just a utilitarian bridge.

"That's the kind of thing you have to be on guard against in the memorial."

'Baseball Can Pay Way.'

Referring to the suggestion that a sports stadium be incorporated into the memorial, Nagel said: "When people begin to talk about putting baseball fields on the riverfront, it should be regarded with suspicion. I like baseball myself, but I am convinced that baseball is quite able to pay its own way and build its own stadiums."

Saarinen, whose design was adjudged the best in a national competition held in 1948, created a scheme which met every need—functional, symbolic historical and monumental, Nagel continued, declaring:

"Do not compromise with excellence. We have been shown the best. Be sure we realize it."

Nagel was one of seven judges who studied more than 150 entries submitted in the memorial competition. The decision awarding Saarinen the grand prize of $40,000 was unanimous.

The history of the riverfront project was reviewed by Luther Ely Smith Jr., assistant secretary of the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial Association, and Julian C. Spotts, superintendent of the memorial.

The League of Women Voters added a study of the charter board of freeholders to its agenda for the coming year and elected the following officers: Mrs. Charles McCluer, Mrs. Richard Waite and Mrs. Walter Strehlman, vice presidents; Mrs. Richard Merkle, secretary; Mrs. Frank Block,

TRUMAN in EUROPE

People of France and Italy Busy, Gay and Prosperous

ROME.

MY first impression of post-war Europe is the recovery and prosperity evident on all sides in France and Italy.

The people are busy and smiling, the crops seem to be in excellent condition, the roads and streets are crowded with all kinds of transport, and the shop windows in the cities have plenty of good merchandise at reasonable prices.

Only in Chicago and New York did I ever see as many cars on the streets as in Paris. The tractors and machinery on the farms appeared to be brand new models and not old war surplus.

Few Traffic Rules.

The French cars are small and seem to be just the thing for Paris because they can dodge in and out of traffic. From what I noticed, there are very few traffic rules, and if there are the drivers don't seem to follow them very closely.

We saw a wreck in the Bois de Boulogne while en route to the cemetery at Suresne to place a wreath on the tomb of the Unknown Soldiers. There are 24 unknown soldiers in that American cemetery, and I said there, they and all the others are the price that we paid for victory in the last war.

One of those small French cars had smashed into the side of another at an intersection. The two drivers were arguing with each other as we passed by, and when we returned an hour later the gendarmes were still trying to settle the dispute between them.

Mrs. Truman was very pleased by her first view of Paris. She had a very nice time and went to several shops and she said she liked what she saw. I haven't received the bills yet.

Quick Tour of City.

We had a quick but very comprehensive 90-minute tour of Paris. I couldn't help but notice how different the passing scene was from what it had been in 1918 when I had first been there.

At that time all the important buildings were boarded up or sandbagged as protection

BAILIFF BREAKS IN ON JURY TO GET BABY'S FORMULA

YOUNGSTOWN, O., May 19 (AP)—The jury was deep in debate in a criminal case involving a policeman accused in a morals case.

The law says juries cannot be interrupted in their deliberations, but the bailiff broke in on the deliberations and conferred with a woman juror who scribbled out a note.

Judge Erskine Maiden Jr. approved yesterday's interruption so the woman juror could pass on the baby's formula to the baby-sitting father.

2 SCHOLARSHIPS FOR MEN OFFERED BY LINDENWOOD

Two young men will have a chance next year to attend Lindenwood College, which is full of girls.

The St. Charles educational institution, a four-year women's college, is offering two dramatic scholarships for men. Applications, which can be obtained by writing the college's director of admissions, must be received by June 1.

To be eligible, the men must be students of junior or senior standing. The college said the winners will be "required" to act in its dramatic productions and to assist in production.

Each scholarship will cover full tuition and board, but living on the campus is out. The men will have to find homes elsewhere.

JAMES ROOSEVELT SAID TO PLAN TO MARRY HIS CLERK

WASHINGTON, May 19 (AP)—Congressional sources said today Representative James Roosevelt (Dem.), California, intends to marry Miss Gladys Irene Owens, a part-time clerk in his congressional office, in June.

Roosevelt, in Los Angeles for two House subcommittee hearings declined to comment on the report.

His divorce from Mrs. Romelle Roosevelt becomes final next month, Roosevelt said, adding: "But I never comment on my personal affairs."

Miss Owens was reported to be in Washington but could not be reached for comment.

Mrs. Roosevelt—who once accused her husband of misconduct with 12 women—won her interlocutory decree last June 21 on an amended complaint charging extreme cruelty. The divorce, under California law, becomes final in one year.

Plan by Fathers to Serve Beer At School Prom Brews Storm

CHAPPAQUA, N.Y., May 19 (UP)—A tempest in a beer barrel raged among Chappaqua's parents today over plans for the fathers to serve alcoholic beverages to high school graduates at their prom.

A decision to arrange for "controlled" drinking supervised by fathers, brought many complaints as well as charges that there is entirely too much drinking among adults in this Westchester county suburb of New York City.

This town of 5000—including a colony of editors, writers, artists, brokers and business executives—was so split over the matter that the minister of the largest church said he would preach on the subject tomorrow.

The storm has been brewing ever since members of the Horace Greely High School graduating class sat down with a group of parents and discussed the matter of drinking. Some of the youngsters felt that they should be allowed to drink in the open, instead of hiding out between dances. They thought there would be less chance of their over-indulging if they could have cocktails or spiked punch at their class party.

Most of the fathers agreed. Among them was G. Norman Scott, a New York broker and father of Arden Scott, senior class president. Scott and other fathers decided to provide drinks stronger than dancing school punch and supervise their consumption at the party following the graduation exercises June 25.

The plans brought cries of alarm from some parents and from the Rev. Kenneth E. Nye, pastor of First Congregational Church. The school board voted not to have anything to do with such a party and ordered teachers to stay away from it. The country club, where the party was to have been held, said it could not condone drinking by youngsters.

The pro-liquor parents and students backtracked slightly. They decided to serve beer, instead of anything stronger, but they still have not found a place in which to serve it.

OREGON WRITE-IN VOTE GIVES EDGE TO STEVENSON OVER KEFAUVER

1952 Nominee Has 59 Pct. — Eisenhower's Poll Heavy — Unexpectedly Large Count Rolled Up by Nixon.

PORTLAND, Ore., May 19 (AP)—Adlai Stevenson bested Senator Estes Kefauver today in nearly complete returns on Oregon's Democratic write-in primary on the party's presidential nomination.

The Republican primary yesterday gave President Eisenhower a heavy vote, turned up an unexpectedly heavy write-in for Vice President Nixon as his running mate, and pitted former Secretary of the Interior Douglas McKay against Democratic Senator Wayne Morse for the Senate in November.

Stevenson was ahead in most of the 36 counties. He had 59 per cent of the write-in votes, being ahead of Kefauver by 16,621 votes in unofficial results from 1858 out of 2519 precincts. He was running 9 to 6 in Portland's populous Multnomah county. The Tennessee Senator at no time held the lead in the count.

Neither Stevenson, the 1952 Democratic nominee, nor his chief rival appeared on the Democratic ballot. Both entered Oregon too late to qualify. The outcome, while no runaway, is certain to hearten Stevenson managers in the final major primary contests coming up in Florida and California.

68 Pct. of Vote.

The Democratic write-in amounted to 64 per cent of the party vote that selected Morse as the Senate candidate over a little-known opponent. It failed to match the Republican turnout, even though the Democrats now hold a 13,000 majority of the state registration.

Mr. Eisenhower's vote exceeded the combined vote of Stevenson and Kefauver by more than 44,000.

Mr. Eisenhower, who was on the ballot, got 89 per cent of the G.O.P. votes cast in the Senate primary.

About 20 per cent of the Republican voters went to the trouble, in the face of a combersome set of ballots, to signify support for Nixon.

The spirited battle between McKay, a favorite target of Democratic critics, and his main challenger, Phil Hitchcock, probably contributed to the relatively big Republican showing at the polls.

McKay, who left the Cabinet to try for the Senate with Mr. Eisenhower's "best wishes," maintained a comfortable margin over the former state Senator who campaigned longer and harder. Both pledge support to the Administration.

Returns from 1858 complete precincts:

Eisenhower (unopposed) 148,175, Nixon (write-in) 31,788.

Stevenson 61,535, Kefauver 41,992.

McKay 84,078, Hitchcock 68,637.

Morse 131,584; Woody Smith 28,247.

Delegation for Eisenhower.

The presidential vote pledged 18 delegates to the Republican national convention to Mr. Eisenhower and 16 Democratic delegates to Stevenson. Republican delegates, in addition, will be bound to Nixon for renomination by his write-in support.

Mr. Eisenhower carried Oregon for the Republicans in 1952, outdrawing Stevenson 420,815 to 270,579. His popularity tally yesterday was approaching the 153,000 he received here in the 1952 primary. Kefauver, the only active primary candidate four years ago, walked off with the Democratic delegation with a vote of 128,696.

The primary produced a surprising feature in what was not supposed to be a contest for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

Lew Wallace, Portland insurance man who withdrew because of a heart condtion, trailed Robert Holmes, Astoria radio station manager, by only 4000 votes in returns from 1864 precincts. Wallace's name remained on the ballot after he stepped out of the race.

Gov. Elmo Smith, who succeeded the late Republican Paul Patterson in February, was a shoo-in on the G.O.P. ticket. All four of the states's congressmen—three Republicans and one Democrat—also had no difficulty winning their party nominations.

Stevenson Has 148½ Delegate Votes; Kefauver 127.

WASHINGTON, May 19 (AP)—Adlai Stevenson now leads Senator Estes Kefauver 148½ to 127 in pledged and publicly committed delegate votes for the Democratic presidential nomination.

That is the lineup in the Associated Press tabulation of primary and state convention results after Stevenson's victory over the Tennessee Senator for Oregon's 16 convention votes.

There are 86 national convention votes spread among 10 others and 278½ are uncommitted.

Delegates with 640 votes have now been selected for a convention which will have 1372 votes. A majority of 686½ will be required for a nomination.

ARABS TOASTED BY KHRUSHCHEV, FRENCH HOPE FOR SUPPORT BLASTED

Sympathy for Algerians Expressed at Reception — No Agreement on European Problems.

By B. J. CUTLER

The New York Herald Tribune-Post-Dispatch Special Radio.

MOSCOW, May 19—Nikita S. Khrushchev, with a single toast in the Kremlin tonight, dashed French hopes for Soviet support of its struggle to put down rebellious Algerians.

The Communist party leader gathered the Egyptian and Syrian Ambassadors around him, and in earshot of foreign newspaper men and French Premier Mollet, raised his glass and declared: "To the Arabs and all other nations that are struggling for national independence."

Khrushchev's statement came after Soviet and French leaders had passed four days in top-level negotiations during which the French Premier and Foreign Minister Christian Pineau had attempted to get an expression of Soviet sympathy and support for France's position in North Africa.

Mollet, who looked tired and drawn after a marathon negotiating session which lasted from 10 a.m. to just before 5 p.m., was visibly disappointed at Khrushchev's statement, but refused to comment on it.

"I am not going to give my opinion on any toast that was not addressed to me," he said.

Toast More Important.

It was the opinion of the assembled diplomats that Khrushchev's toast on supporting people fighting for independence was more important than any statement that could be included in the communique, which had not been made public at the time.

All the French were able to get the Soviet Government to say about Algeria in the communique was that it hoped "an appropriated solution" would be found. A milder expression of sympathy would be difficult to imagine, diplomats noted.

The communique took up European security and stated that both sides agreed in the truisin that peace and security would have a decisive importance for the maintenance of peace throughout the world.

"However, they have not reached an agreement on the means to settle European problems," it admitted.

On disarmament, the communique revealed that neither side had budged from their differing positions. But the French were induced to hail the Soviet decision taken this week to cut its armed forces by 1,200,000 men. This statement is certain to be used by the Soviet propaganda apparatus.

French Mistake.

At the Kremlin reception, a western ambassador whose views are highly respected said the French had made a mistake by allowing the discussion of Algeria in the communique, instead of insisting that it was an internal French problem that should not be treated in international negotiations.

"The French are going to have to pay and pay for this and they are not going to get anything for it," he said.

By the Associated Press.

Mollet told newsmen the French and Russians had only an exchange of views of Algeria. "It is a French problem," he commented.

Mollet said he "had absolutely no illusions that the French delegation would leave its negotiations with the Soviet Union with important agreements in its baggage."

"But I think we have ended the immense lack of confidence the Soviet government had in the West," he continued. "We are happy with out mission and how it has come out."

Divided Germany.

Asked about divided Germany, Pineau said "the government of France thinks the reunification of Germany is a vital factor for the preservation of peace in Europe, but the Soviet Government does not yet think so. That is our difference at present."

The two countries released a declaration on the development of French-Soviet commer-

WOMEN WON'T GET OFF PHONE FOR FIRE, LOSS $5000

KANSAS CITY, Kan., May 19 (AP)—While flames crackled in her home, a frantic housewife pleaded for 15 minutes for two women on a party telephone line to let her call the fire department last night.

The women finally relinquished the line, but the fire burned the line in two at the home of Mrs. Donald L. Siegelen just as she was calling the firemen.

The operator heard the address, however, and finished the message to the Edwardsville volunteer fire department.

The fire, started by a gasoline lantern, caused damage estimated at $5000 before it was put out.

WILSON TO INVESTIGATE PERSONALLY BITTER FIGHT OF ARMY AND AIR FORCE

Stolen Air Base Data Described As 'of the Utmost Significance'

Not Merely Mailing List for Merchants' Use, Says U.S. Attorney — No Charge of Espionage Violation, However.

NEWARK, N.J., May 19 (AP)—Assistant United States Attorney General William F. Tompkins said today the document allegedly stolen by a sergeant at Manhattan Beach Air Force Base in Brooklyn is "of the utmost intelligence significance and contains information affecting the national defense of the United States."

"It contains a complete directory of the United States Air Force bases and organizations throughout the world," Tompkins said. "The listings are in various categories and constitute a complete world wide listing of Air Force components," he added.

Tompkins, head of the Justice Department's Internal Security Division, said the information in the document is within the meaning of the United States espionage laws. "Its transmission or the revelation of its contents in any matter to an unauthorized person is prohibited by law," he said.

However, he told reporters it would be "unfair to draw any inference" that the document was to be used for espionage.

The "spy scare" characterization of the case "is unwarranted and unfair," he added.

"We will have to wait until we have all the facts before we draw a conclusion," Tompkins said. The document has been recovered.

Sgt. Harold E. Brill of the Manhattan Beach base was arrested by Federal Bureau of Investigation agents Thursday night and accused of the theft of the document. Also arrested were three New Jersey business men, charged with conspiracy to steal the secret paper.

Tompkins noted published reports that the document involved was a mailing list of military personnel. He said this was "asbolutely untrue."

He said the document does not contain one name or address of any individual but it contains the locations of Air Force bases.

He said at the top and bottom of the cover page of this document is printed the word "secret." In the center of the cover page is the following statement:

"This document contains information affecting the national defense of the United States within the meaning of the es-

KHRUSHCHEV SAYS RUSSIA IS 'SECOND GREATEST POWER'

MOSCOW, May 19 (UP)—Communist party secretary Nikita S. Khrushchev today referred to Soviet Russia as "the second greatest world power."

He did not name the first.

Khrushchev's remark was made in a conversation with the Egyptian Ambassador at a reception following the French and Soviet talks.

"We are those who fight for liberation," Khrushchev said. "People say that some peoples of some countries cannot govern themselves. We laugh at them. Why Russia has been able to, and has become the second greatest world power. Why cannot the Arabs?"

ROADS BLOCKED BY PROTESTING FRENCH FARMERS

PARIS, May 19 (UP)—Farmers barricaded roads throughout France today, causing frequent traffic jams, in protest against lack of government price supports, high taxation and the rising cost of living.

One serious accident was caused when a heavy truck crashed into a tree-trunk barricade. Several clashes between farmers and police were reported. Besides trees, farmers blocked highways with tractors and other farm implements and bales of hay.

Interior Minister Gilbert Jules ordered police to use bulldozers if necessary to keep Whitsuntide holiday traffic moving.

Near Toulouse and at Saint-Albain in the Saone-et-Loire district police used tear gas grenades to break up demonstrations, then tore down the barricades.

More than 2000 cars were held up between Villefranche and Anse in the Lyon region.

TWO EX-PRESIDENTS SIT SIDE BY SIDE AS ONE PLAYS PIANO

Musician Is Truman—Other Is Luigi Einaudi of Italy.

The New York Herald Tribune-Post-Dispatch Special Radio.

ROME, May 19—Two former presidents sat side by side here tonight as one of them—Harry Truman—sentimentally played Paderewski's Minuet at a piano.

The other ex-President was Luigi Einaudi, who stepped down after a seven-year rule as President of Italy a year ago. Each was a chief of state during much of the cold war.

The two met in the home of Henry R. Luce, husband of the United States Ambassador to Italy, Clare Booth Luce. It was one of Einaudi's rare appearances since his retirement.

DEFENSE CHIEF SAYS BARING OF ROW IS 'MOST UNFORTUNATE'

Rivalry Breaks Into Open When Army 'Leaks' Attack on Air Force Concept of Nuclear War.

By MARQUIS W. CHILDS

A Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

(Copyright, 1956, Pulitzer Publishing Co.)

WASHINGTON, May 19 — Secretary of Defense Charles E. Wilson promised in a statement today to investigate personally the quarrel between the Army and the Air Force that has long been smoldering behind a barrier of enforced silence in the Pentagon.

The inter-service row broke into the open when Army spokesmen made available documents attacking the Air Force concept of all-out nuclear war.

News stories indicating a dispute as bitter as that which raged over "unification" of the services greeted Wilson as he was taking off on a weekend trip. He called it a "most unfortunate business" and added that while he had encouraged the service chiefs to have differing viewpoints, "they don't have to practice psychological warfare on each other."

Wilson said he would "try to keep my temperature down" as he looked into the situation. He expressed displeasure at the mention in published reports of documents apparently supplied to support views of individual military services.

Trial by Propaganda.

The military departments, he said, "don't have to try their differences in public and in the press on a propaganda basis."

"Trouble is the price of progress," he said, "but this is more trouble than we should have."

The fact is that for many months under a Wilson order the speeches and articles of men of the three services have been subject to the most rigid clearance to make sure their differences did not reach public attention.

It is difficult to believe the Secretary of Defense has not been aware of the fierce inter-service rivalry that has taken in recent months so much of the time and attention of top men in the Army, Navy and Air Force.

As one of the three chiefs of staff put it to this reporter yesterday:

"If only we really had one service, then we wouldn't be spending so much of our time planning and plotting against each other. The only answer is one uniform, but it doesn't look as though we were going to get it."

'Leaked' By Army.

The long suppressed rivalry between Army, Navy and Air Force each to keep its own share of the defense dollar "leaked" out with the Army inspiring news dispatches to effect that the Air Force wants complete domination of the military establishment with a concept of total destruction by atomic and hydrogen bombs.

Air Force advocates replied by pointing to the National Security Council finding that massive retaliation through the Strategic Air Command is the chief deterrent to war and America's principal defense shield.

Top men in the Air Force are convinced that the continuing inter-service rivalry, arbitrated by Secretary Wilson by the process of chopping off a little here and a little there, will seriously reduce the value of this shield.

Fantastic New Weapons.

But the fundamental cause of the present service rivalry goes deeper than mere service jealousy. It lies in the failure to revise America's basic strategic concepts in accord with the realities of the nuclear age. This means that new weapons and new tasks are piled on top of the traditional defense structure. As a consequence while 37 billion dollars sounds like a tremendous sum of money for defense, it must cover all the old functions and then be stretched to pay for the fantastic new nuclear and missile weapons. The failure to face strategic realities has a paralyzing effect not only on defense but on foreign policy.

Immediately at issue is the Air Force budget for next year, now being hammered out. It is currently contemplated that $20,000,000,000 to $25,000,000,000 will be requested for the air arm alone. If a ceiling of approximately $37,000,000,000 is imposed, this would mean sharp reductions for the Navy and the Army.

PARADE MARKS ARMED FORCES DAY OBSERVANCE

More Than 4000 Military Marchers, Plus Thousands of Civilians Take Part.

Downtown St. Louis was given a colorful demonstration of the variety and sharpness of this country's military defense yesterday, in an hour of parading in observance of Armed Forces day.

More than 4000 military marchers took part, and they were supplemented by thousands of others from civilian organizations, including bands and drum-and-bugle corps galore.

The weather was perfect for the occasion, with the temperatures standing at 74 degrees and with just enough breeze to ripple the many flags borne by color guards.

The parade moved along a 21-block route starting at Twelfth boulevard and Washington avenue, from there in Sixth street, Locust street, Twelfth, then in Chestnut street to the reviewing stand in front of Soldiers Memorial. It disbanded at Fifteenth street.

Lt. Gen. Myers in Line.

The leader of the line, as usual, was the perennial parade marshal, Steve Kriwanek, and after him came Lt. Gen. Charles Myers, commanding general of the Air Training Command at Scott Air Force Base, who was the ranking reviewer.

The land, sea and air forces were all represented and so were such other services as the Air Defense Filter Center. Military equipment in the line included tanks, artillery pieces and just plain army trucks.

Since it was Saturday afternoon the number of specators was relatively small, but at some points they were as much as three deep, with more than one youngster enjoying the

NEW AIRLINER GROUNDED BY HONEYBEES IN AFRICA

SALISBURY, Southern Rhodesia, May 19 (UP) — Bees grounded an airliner here today.

The Central African Airways had tried for two weeks to entice 75,000 honey bees out of the port wing of its new Viscount turbo-prop airliner. The bees refused to budge.

Today, the airline ordered the plane grounded and the wing disassembled so the bees can be banished by force.

Sailor's Bad Luck Ends at Last, Then Starts Again With Splash

RICHMOND, Va., May 19 (AP) — The way Jack Harris sees it, his luck is bound to change sooner or later.

The Oak Ridge (Tenn.) sailor missed the submarine Cobbler when it left New London, Conn., last Monday. So he hitchhiked to Norfolk to catch up with his crew.

At Norfolk, he just missed the submarine as it left for Richmond.

Harris used his thumb again and was on hand when the Cobbler tied up at the Richmond docks.

Proudly, he walked up the gangplank, saluted the officers, stepped backward—and fell in the river.

He finally made it aboard with the help of his buddies.

U.S. FOREIGN AID SHIFT INDICATED; ARMY CUT LIKELY BY SOME ALLIES

Policymakers Questioning Maintenance of Big Forces — White House Pushing for Review of Problem.

By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER

WASHINGTON, May 19 (AP) — A revolutionary shift in United States foreign aid policy is foreshadowed by studies now being made in key agencies of the Eisenhower Administration under prodding from the White House.

The switch, if carried through as now indicated, will mean a reduction in the military forces of some Allied countries, particularly on the frontiers of the free world in Asia.

Officials say their thinking tentatively indicates such reductions would be justified on two grounds:

First, the real security of all free world countries in the atomic age rests mostly on the protection of the United States nuclear striking power.

Second, the dangers of even small wars have been diminished by Russia's new policy of presenting a more friendly face to the non-Communist world.

Cost Is Principal Factor.

The impulse behind the new look at foreign aid policy lies in large part, however, in the field of cost. There is evidence that Congress and the country are becoming increasingly reluctant to vote the funds necessary to do the job the Administration thinks necessary. The program now before Congress had a rough time this week at the hands of the House Foreign Affairs committee and the Administration is being compelled to retreat from some of its positions.

For example, President Eisenhower and Secretary of State John Foster Dulles have laid heavy emphasis on a need for new authority this year to commit the United States to long term foreign aid spending on specific projects. The House committee knocked out that provision and substituted a general statement of intent to carry on foreign aid which gives no real new power to the President. The Administration had decided, this reporter was informed, not to make a further fight for the long-range provision in the House.

The problem of costs is simply defined. Mr. Eisenhower has stated that foreign aid spending should continue at about the same level—between four and five billion dollars—for a good many years. At the same time his principal advisers on cold war strategy are generally agreed that the United States must spend considerably more in the next few years than it has in the last six on economic assistance, especially to Asian countries.

Military Only Place to Cut.

The only place from which new economic funds can come, in the light of the President's fixed policies, is the military aid appropriations. Thus some of the best informed authorities look for cuts in some Allied military forces. Where, when and how such reductions may be brought about are problems that await further debate in the State and Defense departments and a decision by President Eisenhower and Congress.

The example most often cited is South Korea. That republic has an army of 21 divisions, or about 600,000 men, plus naval and air force units and a reserve force of 10 divisions. The economy of the country is wholly unable to support such a military establishment, according to American officials; therefore he United States has been pouring in funds.

While military aid figures are generally secret, one official said recently that including the cost of United States military units in Korea it was costing this country about a billion dollars a year to secure that country.

United States policy makers now seriously question whether this is efficient or economical spending. In the State and Defense departments many experts challenge the notion that 21 Korean divisions are essential even to Korea's own security. They recall that President Syngman Rhee, who wanted an opportunity to recover North Korea by force, insisted on a large force. But the United States has never been prepared to back a South Korean war against North Korea.

Bulk Goes to Five Countries.

Five countries are said to get the bulk of United States military assistance now. They are all on the periphery of the Soviet-Chinese Communist world and outside the North Atlantic Treaty area.

They are: South Korea with 21 divisions and 10 in reserve; Formosa with about 12 first line and 18 second line or reserve divisions; Viet Nam with the equivalent of about seven divisions and a continuing urgent need to establish its own security against great odds; Pakistan with about eight divisions or 200,000 men on active duty and 1,000,000 in reserve; and Turkey with about 20 divisions, around 500,000 men, under arms.

From the end of World War II until 1950 the great bulk of United States aid, through such operations as the Marshall plan, went for economic purposes. But the need to secure Western Europe against the aggressive threats of Stalinist Russia and the outbreak of the Korean war in mid-1950, switched the whole emphasis in spending. For more than five years now the stress has been on building up armies and propping the economies supporting them. Mr. Eisenhower told Congress a few weeks ago that up to mid-1955 this country had spent 11 billion dollars for weapons and equipment shipped to friendly countries. With this money it helped to raise and maintain more than 180 divisions, about 280 squadrons and more than 550 war vessels.

Touchy Political Topics.

Military sources report that at present the United States is helping maintain about 200 divisions or their equivalent in smaller units, in several dozen countries. No official is willing to say that any particular one of these divisions can be demobilized, but in general it is argued that such a large force no longer appears necessary and that the emphasis should be shifted to primarily economic undertakings.

From a practical point of view authorities are concerned how to handle the political consequences of any such development in view of the outspoken belligerence and insistence on military power of Korea's President Rhee and the continuing insistence on future military action by Formosa's Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. Any discussion of trying to get the Turks to modify their military program immediately stirs concern because of Turkey's record as a stanch ally in the Korean war and its position in the front line of Middle East defenses against Soviet might.

United States expenditures with respect to Europe are generally down, in both the military and economic fields from what they were a few years ago. The great efforts are now in Asia and the Middle East, because it is there that the Communist bloc has made it's main bid for expansion in recent years by either military means or peaceful methods, such as trade and finance.

G.I. WHO FOUGHT JAPANESE IS NOW CITIZEN OF JAPAN

KALAMAZOO, Mich., May 19 (AP)—Relatives said today a former American G.I. who fought in World War II against the Japanese has become a naturalized Japanese citizen, adopting the name of his Japanese wife.

He is Robert Sager, who was sworn as a Japanese citizen in Tokyo May 7 with the name Upton Murakami. He is the first American to be granted Japanese citizenship since the end of the war.

Sager, who is 33 years old, served three years in New Guinea and the Philippines. He met his wife at a Baptist missionary school he set up in Tokyo after the war. They have a year-old son, Tami.

A sister, Miss Patricia Sager of Kalamazoo, said the family "was happy about Bob's marriage because he's happy." She said they were not surprised at his becoming a Japanese citizen because they knew he intended to live in Japan. He now is a teacher at Waseda University in Tokyo.

KEFAUVER ASSAILS 'WHINING' BY PRIVATE POWER GROUPS

WASHINGTON, May 19 (AP)—Senator Estes Kefauver (Dem.), Tennessee, said tonight that while American private power groups dawdle and whine for subsidies, "the British, the French and the Soviet pull ahead in the harnessing of the atom for peaceful energy uses.

In a new attack on what he called the private power monopoly, the Democratic presidential candidate said: "They preach private enterprise until they are given the opportunity to show some enterprise and then they change their tune and want subsidies."

Describing the 1954 proposal for private development of atomic energy as the "most gigantic of all attempted giveaways," Kefauver said:

"For two years now the field here has been open to the private power groups and they have not produced one kilowatt, nor do they have a concrete proposal to produce one kilowatt.

"Instead, the Government having done all the preliminary research with government funds, they are whining for subsidies in the form of reactors, of insurance, of tax deductions and of incentive."

Kefauver, who plans to return to Florida tomorrow to resume his primary campaigning, addressed the Electric Consumers Information Committee.

NIAGARA POWER BILL FACES UNCERTAIN FATE IN HOUSE

WASHINGTON, May 19 (AP)—A Senate-passed bill to permit New York State to build new power plants at Niagara Falls today faced an uncertain fate in the House.

A source close to the House Public Works Committee expressed the opinion the bill by Senator Herbert H. Lehman (Dem.), New York, will not receive committee approval.

In 1953, the House passed legislation to authorize five big New York private utilities to build the $440,000,000 project.

A majority of the House Committee's Republican members are reportedly dead set against permitting the New York State Power Authority to construct the project—a feeling said to be shared by at least three committee Democrats. The Senate passed the bill Wednesday by a 48-to-39 vote.

FURTHER MEDICAL CHECKUPS FOR EISENHOWER THIS YEAR

WASHINGTON, May 19 (UP)—The White House said today that President Eisenhower will have one or two more medical examinations before the end of this year.

White House Press Secretary James C. Hagerty made the statement when asked specifically if Mr. Eisenhower would undergo another examination either before the Republican convention or before the start of the presidential campaign or both.

He said it is a "fair assumption" that the examination will deal more specifically with the President's heart than the "head to toe" general physical examination last week. This showed the President is in "excellent" shape generally.

HENNINGS INVITES CAIN TO AIR HIS SECURITY VIEWS

Ex-Senator's Testimony on Alleged Abuses May Be Important, Missourian Says.

By JAMES DEAKIN
A Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, May 19 — Harry P. Cain, a member of the Subversive Activities Control Board, was invited today to air his critical views on the Administration's security program before the Senate subcommittee on constitutional rights.

Announcing the invitation, Senator Thomas C. Hennings Jr. (Dem.), Missouri, subcommittee chairman, said Cain "may be able to make important contributions" to the subcommittee's investigation of abuses in the security system.

Cain, a former Republican Senator from Washington who was appointed to his present post by President Eisenhower, said Thursday night he believes he is on his way out of his present job.

His term on the SACB expires in August.

Fell Into Disfavor.

Although known as a right-wing Republican when he was in the Senate, Cain has fallen into disfavor with the White House for his recent attacks on the security program, which he has said works too often to hurt individuals unfairly.

Hennings wrote Cain that his recent statements indicated "you may be able to make important contributions which may affect the conclusions of the subcommittee, and which it ought to have before closing its initial report . . ."

Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr. and Secretary of Defense Charles E. Wilson were asked recently to appear before the subcommittee. Hennings said neither man had accepted yet.

"I am confident, however, that their response has been merely delayed, and that they do not intend to ignore a formal request from a committee of the United States Senate to contribute their needed advice and information," he added.

Prompted by Hatkin Charges.

The invitation to Wilson was prompted in part by Cain's charges about the case of Sidney Hatkin, an Air Force economist who was suspended as a security risk, then approached by an official of the Russian embassy.

Hatkin turned down the Russian's offer of a job and reported it to the Federal Bureau of Investigation. After a personal investigation, Secretary of the Air Force Donald A. Quarles restored Hatkin to a "non-sensitive" position.

Hennings asked Cain "to offer your factual testimony, your views and your recommendations on this subject which is so vital not only to the security of our nation but to the individual citizens who are affected" by operation of the security program.

He said the subcommittee "has for some time been engaged in a study of the security programs and the policies and procedures followed by the various departments of the executive branch of the government in the administration of these programs."

There was no indication whether Cain would accept the invitation.

EGYPT REPORTED GETTING 21 BIG RUSSIAN PLANES

Troop Carriers Sighted En Route — Cairo Leaning to Red Bloc Disturbs U.S.

WASHINGTON, May 19 (UP)—Reports in diplomatic circles here today said Russian pilots recently delivered 21 big planes suitable for paratroop use to Egypt.

The planes, already bearing Egyptian markings, flew over Greece en route to their destination, it was reported. The reports coincided with a top-level review here of western relations with Egypt in the light of the Middle Eastern nation's surprise recognition of Red China. Officials speculated that Egypt received the planes—assuming the reports are true—in "payment" for embracing the Chinese Communist regime.

State Department officials said they had no immediate confirmation of delivery of the aircraft.

Nasser Takes Over Red-Supplied Naval Craft; Warns West.

CAIRO, May 19 (UP)—Premier Nasser formally took delivery of Communist-supplied minesweepers and torpedo boats today with a warning to the West that Egypt was free to obtain arms "at any time and in any quantity."

The Cairo radio reported the ceremony and Nasser's speech to naval academy cadets.

Egypt obtained the minesweepers and torpedo boats as part of the Czechoslovakian arms deal, which also included Soviet-made MIG jets.

The broadcast did not specify the number of naval craft received from Czechoslovakia. It said Nasser had appeared at the naval academy in the first graduation ceremony "since the Egyptian navy was reinforced by the Czech arms deal."

"We now have a strong army

By the Associated Press.

Some diplomatic observers here said they believed Egypt might make an arms deal with Communist China as a means of circumventing a possible United Nations embargo on arms shipments to the Middle East. Communist China is not a member of the U.N.

Egypt announced Wednesday it had decided to recognize Red China. Egypt previously recognized the Nationalist Chinese government on Formosa.

IRAQI PARLIAMENT RATIFIES $4,500,000 LOAN TO JORDAN

BAGHDAD, May 19 (AP)—Parliament ratified legislation today authorizing the Iraqi government to lend Jordan up to $4,500,000. The acting foreign minister told Parliament one of the main reasons Iraq wants to help Jordan is that "Jordan lies in the front line" against Israel.

Strange Weather, Fear of Fallout Cause Frustrating H-Blast Delay

Task Force Chief Sees Outside Chance for Shot Today — 45 Help With Forecast.

By BRIG. GEN THOMAS R. PHILLIPS, U.S.A. (Ret.)
Military Analyst of the Post-Dispatch.

ABOARD U.S.S. MT. McKINLEY, off Eniwetok, May 19—The Atomic Energy Commission, guilty two years ago of burning with radioactive fallout about 300 Marshall Islanders and Americans, is taking no chances of a repeat performance.

This and the strange weather in this birthplace of typhoons in the South Pacific, is the reason for the frustrating delay in getting off the Cherokee Shot, a multi-megaton detonation and the United States's first airdrop of a hydrogen bomb.

R. Adm. B. Hall Hanlon, commander of Task Force 7, said in a communique tonight that a storm southwest of Eniwetok was producing conditions that indicate "an outside chance that both cloud cover and low-level winds will be acceptable Monday morning." (Sunday, St. Louis time.)

Even though the fallout is expected to be comparatively negligible from an explosion in the air, precautions are being taken as great as should have been used in the great 22-megaton blast of March 1, 1954.

The danger area has been increased to 375,000 square miles. This covers a retangular area north, east and west of the Eniwetok proving ground. It includes no inhabited islands except the proving ground atolls of Eniwetok and Bikini.

Winds Must Be Right.

Since the mushroom head of the cloud rises to about 100,000 feet and reaches a diameter of about 100 miles, it is essential that there be no winds between the surface and 100,000 feet that will carry any part of the stem or cloud to the south.

Winds from the southwest at all elevations are waited for. Usually winds are from the east at altitudes from the surface up to 20,000 feet, from the west to 55,000 and again from the east to 140,000, and often the winds are also southernly.

It is also necessary to have forecasts of the clouds, since many instruments and cameras must "see" the fireball, temperature, humidity and visibility.

Even the sea must not be too rough, since many small boats must be at sea outside the atolls.

To forecast the weather there is a staff of about 45 expert observers and forecasters, supported by about 500 men of the task force. The forecasters make a prediction every 12 hours, but cannot, owing to the vagaries of the weather, forecast more than 48 hours in advance with sufficient accuracy to warrant planning an explosion.

The forecast predicts the amount of cloud cover at each 1000 feet to 120,000 feet. It also makes a hodograph, on which a weighted wind scale is drawn showing the direction of the wind every 10,000 feet up to 100,000. If any part of the predicted wind would carry the fallout south of an east-west line through Eniwetok, the test cannot be made.

Before the last two failures to fire, Wednesday and Thursday mornings, the predictions had been favorable, although at the last minute it was possible that clouds would obscure the target from the bomber. But on each occasion the low altitude winds shifted toward the south shortly before firing time. This would have caused fallout on Bikini and inhabited islands to the south and no chances are being taken.

It easily would be possible to make the proving ground unusable for a long period if the winds were wrong. It is estimated that the fallout pattern of the Castle shot in 1954 would have made it necessary to evacuate 25,000 square miles temporarily and that after four months an area of 2500 square miles would have remained so hot as to be not habitable.

Tropical Phenomena.

The tropical weather phenomena in this area have no resemblance to weather in the North. There are no fronts of cold air, since a cold outbreak is warmed up by its passage over the ocean before it reaches here.

The easterly tradewinds blow in waves, or ripples, with a succession of hills and valleys, or troughs. When small they travel fast and when large quite slowly. When the easterly hill is large, it causes overcast low and middle clouds, intermittent rain and an abundance of towering cumulus clouds. It brings bad weather. The valley or trough which follows brings clear skies and the kind of weather ideal for a proving ground test.

If the hills and valley are small—ripples—the hills come and go so rapidly that there is not enough time for the valley to form clear skies after the hills have passed. Consequently, the weather for a large shot must await the trough of a large easterly weather wave.

Occasionally a large easterly wave becomes unstable and collapses into a vortex, the beginning of a typhoon. Typhoon is the Pacific ocean term for what is called a cyclone in the Middle West and a hurricane in the Atlantic.

The Marshall Islands are one of the incubation areas of Pacific typhoons. The typhoon Allene originated here and at one time covered an area reaching from Guam to Okinawa. It dissipated over central China, but only after unloading torrential rains in the Upper Yangtze valley and drowning 6000 Chinese.

The weather experts have developed a weather theory they call the solar hypothesis, in an effort to do some long-range forecasting. According to the solar hypothesis there is a relation between sun spots and the arrival of troughs that bring clear weather.

They have developed statistically significant information that wind systems desirable for shooting occur from five to eight days after a solar explosion.

The almost satisfactory weather days of the last two weeks fitted this theory. However, if the hypothesis holds there will not be suitable weather again until after the middle of this week.

CALCUTTA, India, May 19 (UP)—The government sent in health officials today to cope with a growing cholera epidemic that has stricken 1209 persons and killed 173 of them in the last three weeks.

A total of 160 new cases were admitted to hospitals today. Ten of the patients died.

Charges of scandal and mismanagement accompanied the appearance of the black plague. The mayor ordered an investigation of charges that pipe retrieved from scrap heaps had been used to sink wells for drinking water. A union official charged that municipal garbage collectors were selling spoiled fish hauled from markets.

ESTIMATE BOARD TO MEET AGAIN TOMORROW ON CUTS IN BUDGET

Members in Session All Day Yesterday, Seek to Trim $5,000,000 Off Requests for Year.

Members of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment worked all day yesterday and are to meet again tomorrow in an effort to complete a budget for the fiscal year which began April 10.

In a last-minute scramble to prepare an annual appropriation bill and to establish a municipal tax rate for the current year, the board has been meeting daily for the last month, seeking to trim departmental requests for appropriations to a figure which will match the revenues the city expects to receive.

At yesterday's session, the board reached tentative figures for each department but wished to consult some of the department and division heads tomorrow before making the allocations final. The figures will be totaled at that time and if the result is still above the maximum permitted, some further cutting may have to be done.

Departments asked for more than $58,000,000 for the current year, but these will have to be cut to about $53,000,000, an amount which the city estimates will be available in the year.

Essential Services.

In an attempt to provide for all essential services with available funds, the Estimate Board has been carefully scrutinizing each of the thousands of items in the proposed budget.

Some departments may be forced to abandon some contemplated services to provide for others considered more vital, it was indicated. Mrs. E. G. Brungard, director of public welfare, said her department was one of these.

"The park division in my department has been criticized publicly because of the lag in the tree-trimming program," she pointed out. "However, the health division insists a prenatal clinic is necessary to reduce the high infant mortality rate. If I have to choose between tree trimming and the pre-natal clinic, the tree trimming will come out second-best."

The tighter budgeting and the closer study of city revenues was made necessary by the last-minute announcement by the Public Service Co. that it would refuse to pay the city $731,000 it owes as the 5 per cent franchise tax on its bus operations for last year. It also announced it would not pay the tax for this year, making a difference of $1,400,000 in revenues the city expected to have available this year.

Requests Reduced.

In yesterday's meeting the board had pared requests department by department, division by division and section by section.

Tabulations of these pared requests will be made by accountants and will be presented to the board when it reconvenes tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock to determine whether further cutting is needed.

The budget will be presented to the Board of Aldermen when it meets Wednesday. The annual tax bill will be presented at the same time. When these have been introduced the aldermen are required by the charter to meet daily until they have been enacted.

Town Facing Dry Era if Woman Shuts Off Only Pure Water Source

State Board Rules Service Her Father Started Is Not a Public Utility — Disagreement Over Price.

By DAVID LILIENTHAL JR.
A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

MOKANE, Mo., May 19—Angry residents of this farm community say they will be doing less business—and taking fewer baths—if Mrs. Ruby Bonham shuts off the town's only public source of pure water on June 14.

That is the effective date of the ruling made Thursday by the Missouri Public Service Commission, which held that Mrs. Bonham's water line was not a public utility, leaving her free to go out of business if she wants to.

Course Undecided.

The people in Mokane don't know yet what, if anything, they can do to force Mrs. Bonham to keep on supplying them with water from her well. But they say they have a pretty good idea of what will happen if they fail.

Without the water, the town's only barbershop and only tavern would have to close. The frozen food locker, where meat is butchered and stored for close to 300 farm families in the Callaway county area, would have to stop operations, too.

Most families in the town have rain-fed cisterns, but many of these have been out of use for years. Cleaning out an old cistern is said to be no easy job.

A few houses lack cisterns. Even if these families could afford to have water brought in by tank truck, there would be no place to store it.

Inside bathrooms will be a thing of the past, too, what with the limited size of cisterns and the uncertainty of rainfall in central Missouri.

Just Built Bathroom.

L. C. Boone, a merchant, just finished building a modern bathroom in his house. It cost him $1000. But without Mrs. Bonham's water, he said, he won't be able to use it.

J. C. Powell, who runs a lumber yard, said, "We'll be living like a bunch of savages."

Most businesses and about 40 of Mokane's 120 families are on Mrs. Bonham's line. A few households have their own deep wells. Others depend entirely on cisterns.

Mrs. Bonham, who moved to Denver many years ago, inherited the well and line when her father, a physician, retired in 1951.

G. P. Blackmore, former mayor of the town, said she asked the town a year ago to buy the system for $14,000.

Since then, he said, her price has come down to $5000 but is still too high. Public Service Commission engineers recently appraised the facility at $1700, he said, adding that its assessed valuation for tax purposes is only $220.

Other residents said they thought Mrs. Bonham sought the state's permission to shut off the water simply in order to force the town to meet her price.

Reason for Discrepancy.

What they mind most, they said, is the impression that, without her knowledge, some people are using her water for free. This arose from her statement to the Public Service Commission that she had 39 paying customers but that 43 water users signed a petition opposing her request.

A few persons signed the petition twice, once for their homes and once for their businesses, residents explained.

Edgar F. Smith, Mokane mayor, said no one was getting any free water from Mrs. Bonham. "We'd like to deny this charge that she's been fleeced around here," he said.

Townspeople also took exception to Mrs. Bonham's contention that her father, Dr. W. H. Williamson, set up the water line for his own convenience, then let others hook into it as a neighborly favor.

He was in the water business and she continued it, they declared, asserting that Mrs. Bonham's profit is $1200 a year, although she claimed she only made about $50 a year.

Bought Well in 1919.

Dr. Williamson bought the well and pump in 1919 in a bankruptcy sale. He ran a pipe to his house nearby. Later, pipe was laid farther through the town and others hooked on it.

A good part of Mokane, particularly the businesses, grew to depend on the water line.

James Grotewiel, who needs pure water for his barbershop, was critical of Mrs. Bonham, but added, "Don't get us wrong—she's got a well up there and we'd be in a fix if we didn't have the water."

Just how much of a fix, the townspeople may have the occasion to find out, on or after June 14.

In the meantime, they have hired a lawyer in nearby Fulton to see what can be done to keep this summer from being an unusually dry one in Mokane.

TIRRELL SUFFERS STROKE, IS IN SERIOUS CONDITION

Magistrate Frank W. Tirrell of the Third St. Louis County District was in serious condition yesterday at St. Joseph Hospital, Kirkwood, following a cerebral hemorrhage suffered when eating dinner Friday at his home, 864 Atalanta avenue, Webster Groves.

He was reported semi-conscious, with paralysis of the right side of the body and right extremities and loss of speech. His physician said he has a history of hypertension and a heart ailment but had not recently been under treatment.

Tirrell is serving his third four-year term. A 58-year-old bachelor, he is under indictment on three charges of oppression in office, growing out of alleged mistreatment of litigants in his court. An ouster suit based on similar charges is set for hearing May 28 in circuit court at Clayton.

INQUIRY IN DRUGS AT WORKHOUSE TO BE RESUMED

Federal Grand Jury Has Trouble With Witnesses — Baynes Ready to Testify.

An investigation into reports that city workhouse inmates were trafficking in narcotics will be resumed by the federal grand jury tomorrow.

The jury has had difficulty with many of the 24 witnesses called before it, some of whom have refused to give any testimony on the ground they might incriminate themselves, the Post-Dispatch was told.

One of those who refused to testify was a prisoner considered a leader in the series of riots and disturbances at the workhouse in the last year.

Witnesses for the inquiry, including former and present inmates at the workhouse, are being gathered by federal narcotics agents under the supervision of Renato Costarella and by two members of the police narcotics squad—Cpls. Harold Bloss and Louis Schmidt.

Baynes Ready to Testify.

Harold E. Baynes, who resigned as workhouse warden because of a nervous breakdown, has expressed willingness to testify before the grand jury but the time of his appearance is indefinite because of the state of his health.

Baynes told the Post-Dispatch he first suspected that narcotics were being peddled at the workhouse just before Thanksgiving last year.

He said he told Mrs. Edward G. Brungard, director of public welfare, of his suspicion and asked for help.

"She was in favor of taking immediate steps," Baynes declared. "The police and federal men began working on the matter, because it was beyond the facilities of my staff to ferret out."

Frustrations resulting from his failure to introduce successfully modern penal methods in the pre-Civil War workhouse led to the collapse and resignation of Baynes, close associates told the Post-Dispatch yesterday.

Baynes himself was reluctant to discuss some phases of events leading to his quitting, but admitted in an interview he probably "took the job too seriously." He agreed generally with opinions expressed by spokesmen for the city administration and his wife that frustration may have affected his health.

To Enter Another Field.

As a result, Baynes plans to enter a field entirely different from penology, as his doctor has suggested, he said. His resignation was effective yesterday.

Appearing relaxed and calm as he sat at ease in his home on the Workhouse grounds, Baynes discussed his health and the troubles at the Workhouse, which has experienced three riots in the last year.

In answer to a question about what brought on his nervous condition, Baynes replied: "I really can't say, but I do take this business very seriously. There are an average of 450 inmates here and there are many facets of the administration. Perhaps I took it too seriously. I was pretty tense."

His wife, who had been listening to the conversation, interrupted.

"Harold takes things a lot more seriously than other people," she said. "He's sensitive. He took it too personally. To be in a business like this you should be like a duck—let it roll off your back.

"But Harold's not like that. He absorbed it like a sponge. The doctor feels that nothing is worth your health, and we agree."

Circulation Manager Carvell Of Post-Dispatch to Retire

Recalls His 48 Years of Work That Started in Horse-and-Buggy Days.

— By a Post-Dispatch Photographer.
G. E. CARVELL

G. E. Carvell, who started to work for the Post-Dispatch circulation department 48 years ago in the horse-and-buggy days of newspaper distribution, will retire as circulation manager next Saturday, he announced yesterday.

Carvell, now 61 years old, was 13 when he obtained employment as a $4-a-week office boy at the old Post-Dispatch building at 210 North Broadway. He has been with the newspaper ever since except for a period between 1920 and 1923 when he worked for publications in Ohio, Arizona and Oklahoma.

Placed in charge of country circulation when he returned, Carvell became assistant circulation manager in 1936 and succeeded A. G. Lincoln as circulation manager in 1939. He was acting business manager of the newspaper in 1947 and 1948 following Lincoln's retirement. Since 1942 he has been a member of the board of directors of the Pulitzer Publishing Co.

Interesting Business.

"The job of circulating a newspaper may seem unspectacular to an outsider," Carvell said yesterday. "But I have found it a highly interesting business."

Deliveries were made principally by horse and wagon, streetcar and railroad train when he entered the business, he recalled. Carriers and newsboys gathered around the newspaper office each edition time to pick up their bundles. Now papers leave the building in trucks, which cover 2,500,000 miles a year making deliveries to newsboys, stores, branches and carriers within 200 miles of St. Louis.

"The Post-Dispatch had converted to trucks about six months before I began working," he said, "but they had heeded the admonition of the day to 'get a horse,' and had gone back to horse and wagons because of the large percentage of breakdowns in those old chain-drive Logan trucks."

The newspaper did not turn to automotive vehicles again until 1910 when the more rugged Dorris trucks were put into service. Carvell said he authorized use of wagons for some downtown deliveries as late as World War II because of the gasoline shortage.

Newspaper competition was rugged in 1908, Carvell remembered. The Post-Dispatch competed with four English language newspapers — the Globe, Republic, Times and Star—and three printed in German—the Westliche Post, Amerika and Anzeiger.

Taxicab Deliveries.

Before radio, the competition reached its peak each day with the afternoon edition carrying final baseball scores. Using taxicabs, the Post-Dispatch would rush papers to streetcar transfer points and other important intersections in an effort to beat rivals.

"We would get papers to Grand and Olive ahead of the crowd coming from old Sportsman's Park after the ball game," he said. "There would be as many as 50 boys selling papers around that corner at one time. Sometimes we got papers with the final results to Sportsman's Park before the crowd had cleared."

Carvell was the second member of his family to work for the Post-Dispatch. His father, George F. Carvell, was a subscription salesman.

G. E. Carvell formerly was president of the Midwest Circulation Managers' Association and is a director of the International Circulation Managers' Association. He lives with his wife, the former Alma D. Lange, on Telegraph road in St. Louis county. They have one daughter, Mrs. Robert Roe Lubbehusen of Arlington, Va.

He is retiring for reasons of health and will make his home at Clearwater, Fla.

Carvell will be succeeded by George R. Kershaw, 7616 Carondelet avenue, Clayton, who has been in the circulation department for 27 years and assistant manager for the last seven years. Kershaw, 55, began his career in circulation promotion. He is married and has a son, William, and a daughter, Ann.

BOY SCOUT KILLED IN FALL FROM TRUCK

Lad, 11, Had Been Helping Troop Pick Up Waste Paper in Kirkwood.

Robert L. Weicker Jr., 11 years old, was killed yesterday when he fell from a truck being used by his Boy Scout troop to pick up waste paper. The accident occurred in the 1100 block of North Simmons avenue, Kirkwood.

R. L. Weicker Jr.

Coroner Arnold J. Willmann said there was a black mark on the boy's right side which may have been a tire mark.

Donald L. Herweck, 11, 932 South Fillmore avenue, Kirkwood, said he and Robert were on the right running board when Robert suddenly fell.

The Herweck boy said that Robert grabbed the side of the truck and was dragged for a short distance before he relaxed his grip and fell to the pavement. The Weicker boy was dead on arrival at St. Joseph Hospital in Kirkwood.

The Herweck boy shouted to his father, Lester L. Herweck Sr., a committeeman of the Boy Scout troop, who was driving the truck. Herweck told police he stopped the truck immediately and saw Robert about 10 feet behind the machine on the pavement.

Herweck estimated the truck was going about five miles an hour at the time of the accident. He said he had just started ahead again after the boys had picked up some paper. He said he felt a thump but did not know whether it was from striking the boy or going over a bump in the road.

The Weicker boy lived with his parents at 473 South Clay avenue, Kirkwood.

Robert L. Weicker Sr. and another man were on the truck stacking papers when the accident occurred at about 2:15 p.m. The boys had been picking up papers since about 11:30 a.m. and were on the last street of their collection route.

Robert, the only child of the Weickers, was a sixth grade student at Concordia Lutheran School, 110 West Woodbine avenue, Kirkwood.

John A. Kouwenhoven, professor of English at Barnard College, New York and former managing editor of Harper's Magazine, arrived in St. Louis yesterday to complete research work at Missouri Historical Society for a book he proposes to write about planning and construction of Eads bridge.

Entitled "The Bridge," the book would be a panoramic treatment of that period in history marked by erection of the bridge. Kouwenhoven is the author of "Made in America" and "Adventures in America."

While in St. Louis, he is staying at the home of Stanley J. Goodman, 35 Briarcliff drive, Ladue.

It started on the dot as scheduled at 1:30 p.m., with a burst of bombs, and a few minutes later a formation of jet fighter planes swished across the sky.

Colorful Uniforms.

Splashes of color in the uniforms of the drum-and-bugle teams, young and not so young, brightened the line from first to last, and so did the several hues of paint on the helmet liners worn by the troops.

Automobile traffic was barred from the streets, of course, but policemen made no effort to keep pedestrians from darting across the line of march.

A unit that caused considerable interest was one from Fort Leonard Wood, preceded by a truck bearing a sign that said, "These men are SMART—Six Month Army Reserve Trainees." They are meeting their draft obligations with only six months of active training.

Another was the Moolah Temple mounted patrol, which had the only horses in the parade.

He said his clients "apparently . . . obtained mailing lists of military personnel so they could be solicited for uniforms."

PRESIDENT SIGNS $2,640,000 BILL

By a Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, May 19—St. Louis will have $2,640,000 in federal funds available for immediate use for a start on the riverfront memorial project as a result of the signing by President Eisenhower of a supplemental appropriation bill today.

This will make possible preliminary work of relocating railroad tracks on the Mississippi river levee and grading of the site, first step toward ultimate development of the 40-block area as the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial.

Mr. Eisenhower's action brought to an end almost 25 years of effort to obtain federal assistance to build a sweeping expanse of parkway at the city's front door to commemorate the Louisiana Purchase and the opening of the west.

Additional Money.

Additional appropriations must be sought in future years to complete the project, at a total cost estimated at $30,000,000, but sponsors of the memorial have said approval of the initial amount will set a precedent making it easier to obtain federal funds as the work progresses.

As signed by the President, the compromise appropriations, $360,000 less than originally requested, carries a provision permitting the federal money to remain available until expended, so that the project can go ahead without any deadline.

The supplemental bill containing the St. Louis funds appropriates $852,000,000 for various Government activities in the current fiscal year ending June 30.

Mr. Eisenhower signed the bill without commenting on the memorial, but he issued a brief statement on another section of the measure relating to controversial financing proposals for the Tennessee Valley Authority.

His signature was affixed two days after the Senate and House passed a conference committee report on the supplemental bill. House backers of the memorial beat back a last-minute attempt to kill the memorial appropriation.

Mrs. Sullivan's Support.

Representative Leonor K. Sullivan (Dem.), St. Louis, in whose district the riverfront park will be located, led the long fight in Congress to obtain the initial federal funds. Her husband, the late John B. Sullivan, was a strong supporter of the project in his terms in the House.

The $2,640,000 will be the federal contribution to the cost of relocating five sets of railroad tracks which now run along the levee, and grading the site. The tracks will be placed in a 3000-foot tunnel to permit an unobstructed view of the park and the river.

Estimated cost of this phase of the project will be more than $6,000,000, with the Government's share limited to $1,875,000.

Remainder of the cost will have to be borne by the city and the railroads. The rest of the federal money will go toward grading, principally filling in of ground at the northern and southern end of the park area to hide the tunnel approaches.

Delays and obstacles encountered by the memorial request in the current session of Congress made it appear at times that no money would be voted at all.

cial relations and another one on cultural contact.

In the section on disarmament the joint declaration said "the French government recognizes the importance of the decisions adopted by the Soviet government to reduce its armed forces and its armaments unilaterally. It would appear perfectly natural that this would aid the progress of negotiations which are now going on concerning disarmament."

Apparent Hint to U.S.

This section looked like a hint that both countries would like to see top-level talks on disarmament between the United States and Russia.

An authoritative French source said the Soviet leaders were annoyed by a persistent French request for an expression of Soviet sympathy with French difficulties in Algeria where the bulk of a French force of more than 300,000 men is fighting nationalist rebels.

Possibly piqued by this persistence, Khrushchev loudly toasted the Arabs before Moscow's assembled diplomatic corps. "If you make a microscopic analysis you will find there is no difference in the blood of Arabs, Russians or any other people," he said.

Khrushchev followed his forthright toast to the Arabs with a toast to "the liberation of all oppressed people struggling for national and social liberation.

"We will toast to this as long as the struggle continues," Khrushchev continued. "You cannot stop history. We are for those who fight for liberation."

The Soviet and French statesmen were gathered in St. George's Hall of the grand Kremlin palace, glittering scene of the banquet that was thrown off schedule by the behind-the scenes wrangle over North Africa.

At 8 p.m. the Soviet leaders, Mollet and Pineau descended from the hall to sign the leatherbound document containing the communique. The signing ceremony originally was scheduled for 3:45 p.m.

Premier Bulganin signed for the Soviet Union and Mollet for France. The entire presidium of the Soviet Communist party was banked behind them with the minister of defense, Marshal Zhukov, and Khrushchev standing directly behind Bulganin. Zhukov leaned over Bulganin's shoulder, exchanged a few words with him and examined the document before the Soviet Premier applied his signature.

GIRL SCOUT GOAL TO ENROLL HALF IN 7 TO 9 AGE GROUP

In the foreseeable future one out of every two girls between the ages of 7 and 9 in this country will be in a girl scouting organization, Miss Dorothy C. Stratton, national executive director of the Girl Scouts, said here yesterday at the closing session of the Girl Scouts Metropolitan Councils conference.

At present there is one out of every four girls in that age group in the organization, Miss Stratton said. She listed this as one of three reasons girl scouting is a public trust. The others were because the group was granted, in 1950, a congressional charter and because of the increased number of scouts in foreign countries.

She said the organization has a "priceless public trust" because it is entrusted with the public's children, time and money. The three-day meeting, held at Hotel Sheraton-Jefferson, was attended by delegates from 31 Girl Scout Councils throughout the country.

REPORTS RUSSIA MAY BACK JAPAN FOR MEMBER OF U. N.

WASHINGTON, May 19 (UP)—Japanese Agriculture Minister Ichiro Kono said today Soviet officials in Moscow told him they would support Japanese membership in the United Nations once Russo-Japanese diplomatic relations are restored.

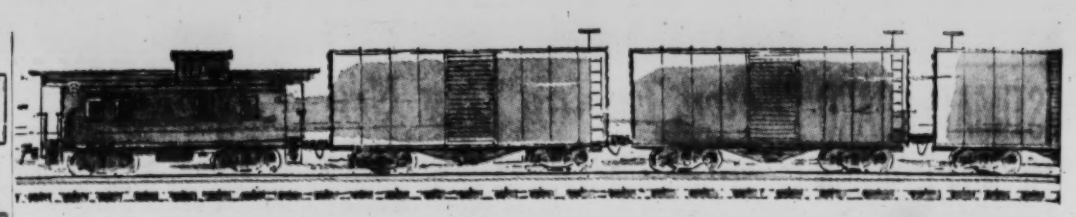

Kono did not specify, however, whether the Soviets wanted diplomatic relations resumed through the medium of a peace treaty, or whether they favored exchanging envoys without settlement of issues standing in the way of a peace treaty contract.

Kono made the statement at a news conference after meeting 90 minutes with Secretary of State John Foster Dulles. Kono stopped at Washington on his flight home from fisheries negotiations in Moscow.

BENSON THINKS FARM BILL IS MUCH IMPROVED

Some House Leaders Expect Quick Accord on Measure Approved by Senate.

WASHINGTON, May 19 (AP)—Quick settlement of Senate-House diferrences over the latest draft of an election year farm bill was forecast by some House leaders today.

Although sharp differences of opinion still existed, they did not appear to rule out compromise in time to get a bill to President Eisenhower next week.

There was even a chance that the House would accept a bill passed by the Senate last night without further wrangling.

The Senate version, passed after two days of debate, won qualified support today from Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson.

Benson has commented that "a quick check of the bill indicates that, over-all, it has been much improved from the standpoint of the Department of Agriculture."

The Senate measure modifies some features of the House-passed bill distasteful to the Administration, and gives the President his $1,200,000,000 soil bank program for paying farmers to take surplus crop land out of production.

Neither Senate nor House version authorizes advance soil bank payments this year on next year's land withdrawals. Mr. Eisenhower asked for this authority when he vetoed a more extensive farm measure last month.

In advance of compromise efforts, Representative Harold D. Cooley (Dem.), North Carolina, said in a statement he hopes the new bill will go to the President before the end of next week and that he "can see fit to sign it."

Cooley, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, sought an immediate meeting of House and Senate conferees in the event the House refuses to accept the new Senate bill as is.

Representative Clifford Hope of Kansas, senior committee Republican, told reporters "I can't conceive of it being very difficult to get together on the bill."

"I don't think anyone will fight, bleed and die over it now," he said. "I can't think of anything we could do that would prevent the bill from being signed by the President."

However, Representative W. R. Poage (Dem.), Texas, indicated a fight might be impending and declared "it may take quite some time to get an agreement."

He itemized as "basic differences" Senate omission of a House provision spelling out congressional intent for getting the soil bank into operation this year, and Senate approval of the cut-rate sale of 100,000,000 bushels of surplus wheat annually as livestock feed.

The House specifically provided that soil bank payments start in 1956. The Senate bill, in effect, says Benson may start operations this year only to the extent he deems practicable.

Cooley interpreted this to mean the soil bank would not become effective until 1957.

Poage charged the Senate language was a "political gimmick" which would allow Benson to channel soil bank funds to "doubtful districts" where the Republicans need votes next November.

"I don't think it would go into effect in Georgia or Texas, for example," he said.

Three Rejections.

The Senate provision for selling Government surplus wheat as livestock feed has been turned down on three previous occasions by the House Agriculture Committee. Both Poage and Hope singled it out as a likely issue of further dispute.

The final compromise is certain to fall short of every Administration farm policy goal. Over all, however, it shaped up as a major victory for the President in his continued opposition to rigid supports and other price lifting devices contained in the vetoed farm bill.

Cooley said these vetoed proposals "would have checked and changed the tragic downward trends of the farmer's income" if they had been adopted.

"But in the present situation we have had to be realistic and not press again the provisions which would bring another veto," he said. He added: "This is not capitulation. The fight for the farmer will go on."

COUNTY-WIDE REGISTRATION SET FOR JUNE 7

Offices to Be Open in Each of 360 Precincts to Sign Up New Voters.

An intermediate registration for new voters will be held in St. Louis county June 7, John J. Cole, chairman of the Board of Election Commissioners, announced yesterday. Registration offices will be open from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. in each of the county's 360 precincts.

The board had planned to conduct registrations only in about a third of the precincts, but decided yesterday to have a county registration corresponding to a precinct registration in the city the same date, Cole said.

Prospective voters not already registered under the permanent voter registration law may register at the election board office in the Clayton courthouse on weekdays between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m. and from 9 a.m. to noon Saturdays.

Final date for registration in the county before the Aug. 7 primary election will be July 2. Deadline for registrations in the city will be July 14.

Cole also announced June 15 as the deadline for withdrawal of candidates in the county for party nominations in the Aug. 7 primary. This deadline is about a month earlier than usual.

Reason for advancing the deadline on withdrawals, Cole explained, is two-fold. First, the election board wanted to allow sufficient time to set up voting machines which will be used for the first time in a county-wide election and, second, it will allow ample time for printing of absentee and ward ballots which, under state law, must be available 30 days before the election.

Cole also announced that about 100 voting machines will be placed on demonstration in stores and business establishments throughout the county about June 15 to enable voters to learn how to operate them. A total of 775 machines will be available for use in the primary elections.

N.E.A. HEAD PREDICTS DAY OF PLENTY FOR EDUCATION

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 19 (AP)—A day of plenty for education was forecast yesterday by the president of the National Education Association in a speech before the sixty-fifth annual convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

Dr. John L. Buford, Mount Vernon, Ill., said the day is coming when no one will have to "beg or wheedle for money for school buildings, teachers' salaries and so forth."

"People will be anxious to give it to us when they realize the importance of education," he said.

Dr. Buford said he believes fundamentals are being taught properly in the schools. "I personally think that more children are reading more and much better than they ever have."

SALVATION ARMY COLONEL TO ADDRESS KIWANIS CLUB

Open houses in celebration of National Salvation Army Week will be held from 2:30 to 5 p.m. at South Boradway Corps and Community Center, 2200 South Seventh street; the Men's Social Service Center, 3949 Forest Park boulevard; and the Evangeline Residence, Eighteenth and Pine streets.

JEANA DALE BEARCE EXHIBIT OPENS HERE NEXT SUNDAY

An exhibition of paintings, drawings and prints by Jeana Dale Bearce, former St. Louis artist now living in Brunswick, Me., will be on display at The Center, 3559 Lindell boulevard, from next Sunday through June 9.

Mrs. Bearce, who formerly was art instructor at Central School for the Deaf and St. Mark's High School, will be in St. Louis for a reception from 3 to 5 p.m. Sunday. She is a graduate of Washington University School of Fine Arts.

The artist married George D. Bearce, assistant professor of history at Bowdoin College, in New York last summer. They made a honeymoon tour of Europe. Works in the exhibit opening Sunday were started during the trip to Europe, officials of The Center said.

SILK TASSELS AMONG ITEMS IN CUSTOMS SALE

Imported silk tassels will be among several hundred items that the United States Customs Service here will offer at public auction Wednesday at 10 a.m. at the Federal Building, Twelfth boulevard and Market street.

The articles, ranging from parts for a Ferrari automobile to three muzzle-loading pistols, are "abandoned and forfeited property" that will be sold to the highest bidder on a "where is and as basis," Collector of Customs Cleta M. Smith said.

There's a dandy slightly-used Oriental rug for sale but anyone bidding on it will have to take the other items in the unclaimed consignment—old jewelry, old furniture and old books. Everything must be sold in lots, Collector Smith pointed out.

Another bargain is an electric hot dog machine, provided the buyer has a use for the 11 other machines in the lot. The unusual array—there are 53 lots—will be on display for the interested and the curious in room 108 Tuesday.

TWO FESTUS MEN KILLED IN FLASH FIRE, THIRD HURT

Three Workers Are Burned When Chemicals Ignite at Fertilizer Plant.

Two men burned early yesterday in a flash fire at the fertilizer plant of the Missouri River Chemical Co., six miles south of Festur, died last night at St. Joseph Hospital in Kirkwood. Physicians at the hospital said both men, burned when chemicals ignited after ac ompression failure, died seconds apart at 9:05 p.m.

They were: William Wesley Hutchins, 32 years old, and Max Helm, 40, both of Festus William L.. Weger, 28, also of Festus, who was burned at the same time, was listed in serious condition last night.

The accident occurred at 3:35 o'clock as the men were working near a large hydrogen compressor used in the manufacture of ammonia in the process of creating ammonium nitrate.

A company spokesman said that there appeared to have been "some kind of a failure" in the compressor which is used to mix hydrogen and nitrogen gases at a maximum pressure of 6000 pounds to the square inch. This resulted in a piston rod breaking through one end of the compressor, releasing the gases, which immediately ignited. The fire was extinguished within a few minutes.

The accident took place at one end of the building. Others in the crew of 140 men were not injured and production continued. The plant on a tract which contained Selma, Hall, historic Mississippi River mansion, was opened eight months ago.

TEXTILE UNION CONDEMNS WHITE CITIZENS' COUNCILS

The New York Times News Service.
(Copyright, 1956, by the New York Times Co.)

WASHINGTON, May 19—The Textile Workers union thrust aside the warnings of its southern delegates yesterday and adopted a resolution favoring school integration and condemning White Citizen's Councils.

Two of the southern delegates spoke for the resolution, but all the other southerners who joined thte debate made fervent pleas against it. No one defended segregation or the White Citizen's Councils. The issue was the wisdom of taking a public position on the controversy.

The convention resolved that "(1) We call upon the President to convene a conference of southern Governors and provide other moral leadership for the peaceful and orderly transition to an unsegregated public schools system; (2) we denounce the White Citizen's Councils and allied organizations as enemies of law and order and bitter foes of the labor movement. We call upon members of labor unions and all those devoted to southern progress to scorn these groups."

WHEALEN SAYS G.O.P. IS AIDED BY STATE'S IDLE FUNDS ISSUE

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

SPRINGFIELD, Mo., May 19—Joseph M. Whealen of St. Louis, candidate for Republican nomination for Governor, told a Greene county G.O.P. women's meeting today that Republicans have a good chance to carry Missouri this year because of the Democrats' record in idle state funds.

He charged a "fabulous money-making machine," under which interest-free deposits were distributed to politically-favored bankers, was permitted to operate during the Democratic administrations of Gov. Phil M. Donnelly and former Gov. Forrest Smith.

Whealen urged Greene county Republicans to join the movement to oust from state G.O.P. leadership those who had benefited from the Democrats' handling of idle state funds. After "cleaning our own house," he said, "we can defeat the Democrats and clean the state house."

INQUEST ORDERED IN DEATH OF WEALTHY MAN IN HOTEL

BOSTON, May 19 (AP)—Officials remained uncommunicative today about the week-old death in an unfilled hotel bathtub of Eric Thomson, 56 years old, wealthy Bermuda sportsman-traveler.

Dr. William J. Brickley, Suffolk county medical examiner, ordered an inquest; ordered the room in the hotel sealed and succeeded in having probate court delay transmission of Thomson's will and property to Sidney Blumenthal, special administrator of the estate.

Dr. Brickley said there was evidence the man, his pajama-clad body punctured about 80 times, died of poison and violence. The punctures were of the type resulting from a hypodermic needle.

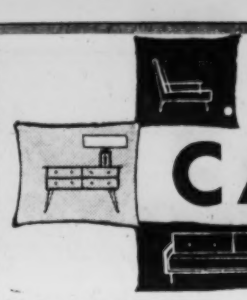

A hypodermic needle of the type used by diabetes sufferers was found in the room.

Dr. Brickley reported Thomson had been under treatment here for epilepsy, cirrhosis of the liver and other ailments in addition to diabetes.

AUTO PLANTS' LAY-OFF PAY WON'T BAR STATE BENEFITS

The State Employment Security Office announced yesterday that unemployed automobile workers are entitled to normal state unemployment benefits in addition to such compensation as may be given by companies.

Contracts between the AFL-CIO United Automobile Workers and major automobile manufacturers provide for company-financed supplemental unemployment benefits during layoff periods. Such payments are to be disregarded by the state in determining unemployment benefits.

BOY IS SHOT WHILE THWARTING HOLDUP

Wellston Youth, 16, Tried to Kick Revolver From Man's Hand.

A youth 16 years old was shot in the thigh early yesterday when he attempted to kick a revolver from the hand of a holdup man in the 1400 block of Cockrill street. He was treated at St. Louis County Hospital.

David E. Anderson, who lives at 6228 Ridge avenue, Wellston, told police he and two companions were walking in Cockrill street when a Negro stepped from an alley and ordered them to hold up their hands. Anderson kicked at a revolver in the man's hand, and two shots were fired. One bullet struck him in the right thigh. The holdup man fled.

Following the shooting, Anderson and his companions drove to the home of a physician, and then to the hospital. They stopped on the way to repair a flat tire, they reported.

John H. Christian, 606 Hickory street, was found dazed early yesterday near his home by police, to whom he reported he had been beaten by robbers. He said the holdup men, Negroes, accosted him in the 1500 block of South Third street.

After beating him the robbers fled with his wallet, containing only personal papers. He tried to make his way hom, but collapsed at Broadway and Soulard street.

Jewelry valued at $469 and $692 in cash were stolen yesterday from the home of Joseph Rezabek, a baker, 144 West Velma avenue, Lemay, he reported yesterday.

Rezabek told county police he is preparing to move and had the cash and jewelry in packing boxes and a dresser. Entrance to the house was gained by forcing a basement window.

GEORGE GIVES PLEDGE TO FIGHT FOR PEACE

Retiring Senator Honored at 'Appreciation Day' in Georgia.

GAINESVILLE, Ga., May 19 (AP)—Senator Walter F. George of Georgia pledged today to carry on a fight for world peace and "the enlarged freedom of mankind" when he becomes President Eisenhower's personal ambassador to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

George spoke in a voice heavy with emotion after listening nearly two hours to tributes paid him by Democratic and Republican colleagues at an "appreciation day" ceremony highlighting the annual Georgia poultry festival.

He thanked the 2500 people, 11 Senators and 6 Georgia Congressmen present for the "generous reception, recognition and honor given me," and then warned that the people of America must fight for peace if they want to maintain it.

The chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said that in this atomic age "we must be ready to fight before the battle opens, because there will be no time to prepare."

At the same time, he said, Americans must encourage "free people everywhere who are constantly striving for peace.

"If NATO falls apart—and I certainly don't think it will—the United States would be isolated . . . and communism would sweep across all Europe," he said.

Senator William F. Knowland of California said that "on behalf of all the Republicans and the Democrats as well in the Senate we are glad to pay this tribute to you and are pleased that you are going to continue to give your great talent to the country."

George was termed "one of the greatest living Americans today" by Senator John L. McClellan of Arkansas. He said the veteran Senator's leadership "in foreign affairs often meant the difference between victory and defeat."

Senator Richard B. Russell of Georgia was master of ceremonies. He said Secretary of State John Foster Dulles was unable to attend but read a letter from Dulles which spoke of George's "profound influence and wisdom in foreign affairs" and expressed happiness that George will continue to advance the cause of world peace after he leaves the Senate."

CARPENTER HEADQUARTERS

St. Louis campaign headquarters for L. C. Carpenter, candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor, will be opened tomorrow at 4 p.m. at 1027 Washington avenue, it was announced yesterday.

Carpenter, state commissioner of agriculture, will speak at the headquarters at 7:30 p.m., outlining his platform and discussing campaign issues. It will be his first major St. Louis speech.

JUVENILE INQUIRY BY COUNTY POLICE

DuBois to Seek Reasons for Planned Fight by Students.

An investigation to determine what led to a planned fight Wednesday night between St. Louis and St. Louis county high school students is being made by the county police department, Superintendent Albert E. DuBois announced yesterday.

If any ringleaders are found, they will be subject to arrest and turned over to juvenile or prosecuting authorities depending on their age, DuBois said, adding: "There is usually a sparkplug who stirs up these things."

Several youths who were involved in plans for the free-for-all fight, averted by county police who had received telephone tips, will be questioned.

DuBois said he hopes, through investigation, to avoid future incidents by finding and eliminating the reasons behind the planned fracas.

Names of 75 youths reportedly involved in the Wednesday night affair were sent to St. Louis Police Chief Jeremiah O'Connell by DuBois. The county police superintendent said he would inform St. Louis police juvenile officers of any aspects of the county investigation relating to city students.

Students from Affton, Mehlville, Bayless and Hancock high schools in the county and Roosevelt and Cleveland high schools in St. Louis were involved, police said.

RED ANTI-STALIN DRIVE IS CALLED MENACE TO WEST

House Group's Report Warns That Soviet Leaders Seek to Lull, Split Free Nations.

WASHINGTON, May 19 (AP) —Contributors to a symposium released by the House Committee on un-American Activities today warned that the new Soviet campaign of anti-Stalinism presents a menace to the free world greater than Stalinism itself.

The new Russian leaders, who have denounced the dead dictator, were described as still pursuing his goal of world domination but by more subtle methods—seeking to lull, divide and undermine the free nations.

The committee asked 39 educators, writers, veterans' organization leaders, labor union heads, ex-Communists and others to write their views on anti-Stalinism and the recent twentieth congress of the Soviet Communist party.

The views were published in the symposium which the committee entitled "The Great Pretense."

J. Edgar Hoover's Comment.

In a summation at the end of the booklet, J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, said:

"When the Communist smirk begins to change to a smile, as is the case right now, we would be well advised to refocus our sights. Behind those changing spots, the same bad blood still flows through the leopard's veins."

Hoover said the "defrocking" of Stalin had brought reprecussions in Communist circles over the world and in the United States "confusion and disillusionment have developed in the Communist party."

He added, though, "there is no danger that the unbilical cord will be severed. The party in America still is a dedicated child, completely dependent upon the proud parent in Moscow."

Hoover repeated his warning that Communists in America are trying to work through front organizations.

Confusion and Deception.

In a foreword, Representative Francis E. Walter (Dem), Pennsylvania, chairman of the House committee, said the Stalin purge was all the more dangerous because of the confusion and deception which it engendered.

The committee said the writers of the symposium stood together on three major conclusions:

1. The current policy and tactics of the Soviet Union present the greatest danger ever to confront the West.

Reflection of Strength.

2. The developments in the Soviet Union are a reflection of growing strength and confidence rather than weakness.

3. The policy of anti-Stalinism does not denote any abandonment of the messianic Soviet program of universal conquest.

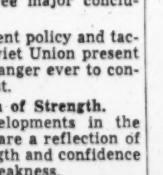

Contributors included Whittaker Chambers, a self-acknowledged former Soviet underground courier. Chambers summarized that the Communists were changing tactics, not intentions.

"Communism is cleaning house in order to make its personnel, its formations, its tactics, more acceptable, efficient, up to date and thus to hasten its project of dividing, wooing and winning the West, preparatory to overrunning the West," Chambers wrote.

William C. Bullitt, American Ambassador to the Soviet Union in 1933-36, said the Soviet objective was "to lull us into a sleep of death while the Soviet Union achieves control of new areas without war and prepares sufficient hydrogen bombs and intercontinental jet bombers to destroy our retaliatory power by a sneak attack, so that some day it will be in a position to blot us out with impunity."

MISSILE TESTING DEVICE EVOLVED AT M'DONNELL

Parts Can Be Examined Under Heat Encountered at Speeds of 5000 M.P.H.

Equipment for testing guided missile components under extreme heat encountered at speeds of more than 5000 miles an hour has been developed here by McDonnell Aircraft Corp., it was announced yesterday.

The heat-test facility, which is now in operation, subjects a specimen missile 15 feet long and 3 feet in diameter to temperatures as high as 1000 degrees Fahrenheit, while smaller structures can be tested at temperatures up to 1500 degrees, it was reported.

Due largely to friction of the air, extreme heat develops on the outer skin of an object moving faster than the speed of sound. A missile traveling 5300 miles per hour at an altitude of 90,000 feet is subjected to a temperature of approximately 1500 degrees.

Because the structural effects of such aerodynamic heating constitute a relatively new problem, McDonnell engineers conducted research in high-temperature testing in the laboratories at Lambert-St. Louis Field, studying several systems of rapid heating.

The method finally adopted to provide a desired heating rate of 15 degrees a second was a radiant heat system utilizing quartz lamps as heat reflectors. This affords great flexibility, since the number of lamps used and the distance between lamps and the missile specimen can be varied.

It was necessary to step up laboratory electrical capacity in order to obtain the large amounts of power required. The present installation can supply approximately 600 kilowatts, it was explained.

McDonnell considers this method of structural testing a significant improvement upon conventional testing, asserting that it more closely duplicates flight conditions through simultaneous application of flight loads and heat to basic structure.

The company has 10 missile engineering and production contracts for the Navy and the Air Force.

DEMOCRATS HIT SNARL IN NAMING THEIR DELEGATES

Problem Will Have to Be Unraveled at Missouri Convention May 28.

By HERBERT A. TRASK
State Political Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

A complicated mix-up has jammed the machinery by which Missouri Democrats are electing delegates and alternates to the party's national convention in Chicago next August—a problem which will have to be straightened out at the Democratic state convention May 28 in Jefferson City.

It is a foregone conclusion with most party leaders that the state convention will instruct the Missouri delegation to vote as a unit at Chicago in support of Senator Stuart Symington for the Democratic nomination for President.

But there is considerable doubt about the way the convention will first unravel the delegate-selection snarl, so as to have a legally-constituted delegation to cast Missouri's 38 national convention votes for "favorite son" Symington.

The trouble started last March when the Democratic State Committee proposed that four of the top state party leaders be named as delegates-at-large with a full vote each in the national convention, and that all other delegates should have only one-half vote each.

Those designated for special recognition were former President Harry S. Truman, Gov. Phil M. Donnelly, Senator Thomas C. Hennings Jr. and Senator Symington.

Truman Not Delegate.

The first complication came when the former President decided, after some confusion about his personal wishes, that he did not want to be a Missouri delegate, preferring to have a free hand at the Chicago convention.

Since then, party leaders reported, Gov. Phil M. Donnelly also has indicated he does not want to be a delegate. With both Truman and Donnelly dropping out, the state convention must decide whether to replace them with two delegates having a full vote each or with four delegates with one-half vote each.

It also has been proposed that all delegates, including Hennings and Symington, be allotted only one-half vote. If this is done, six additional at-large delegates will have to be named.

Another major problem has arisen because the Democratic State Committee failed to follow the national committee's instructions governing the selection of national convention delegates and alternates.

16 Votes At Large.

Missouri was allotted 38 votes in the Chicago convention. The state was given two votes for each of the 11 congressional districts, a total of 22, and 16 additional votes-at-large.

The national convention ruled that each state could have twice as many delegates as it has votes in the national convention; that it could not have one alternate for each delegate-at-large, but only one alternate for each vote allotted on the basis of the congressional districts.

This means Missouri could have four delegates with one-half vote each from each of the 11 congressional districts, but only two alternates from each district.

The state committee, however, decided that each district should elect four delegates and four alternates. The Democratic congressional district conventions in St. Louis and Kansas City are following the state committee's order, although this violates the national committee rules.

The congressional districts will be permitted to elect twice as many alternates as they should, with the expectation that the state convention will correct the defect.

Alternates-at-Large.

Party leaders plan to ask the state convention to approve the shifting of two district alternates to alternates-at-large, so everyone named to the convention can go.

As it is shaping up, Missouri Democrats will send 130 delegates and alternates to the presidential nominating convention to cast the state's 38 votes. The total includes 76 delegates and 54 alternates.

Although the delegate problem will complicate proceedings at the state convention, there is little doubt that the state party meeting will instruct the national convention delegation to support Symington solidly for the presidential nomination.

"It should be done and it will be done," Mark R. Holloran of St. Louis, Democratic national committeeman for Missouri, said yesterday. "Senator Symington will be backed not only as a favorite son, but as a full fledged candidate for the presidency."

Holloran, who is expected to be unopposed for re-election as national committeeman at the state convention, said he thought the Missouri delegation will continue to vote as a unit for Symington as long as the Missouri Senator has a chance for the nomination. And, in the opinion of most Missouri Democrats, that chance is improving steadily.

GEN. W. E. POTTER PROMOTED

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 19 (AP)—It is now Maj. Gen. W. E. Potter. Word of his promotion from brigadier general was received here yesterday. The general, who is Missouri river division engineer with headquarters in Omaha, leaves soon to become Governor of the Panama Canal Zone.

Vote Records Of Illinoisans, Missourians

By a Washington Correspondent Of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, May 19.

FOLLOWING are recorded votes of Missouri and Illinois members of Congress on important measures during the week:

SENATE

Formation of a civil rights division in the United States Department of Justice to "insure the rights of Negroes and other minorities" was called for in a resolution adopted yesterday by delegates to the thirty-ninth annual conference of the National Federation of Settlements and Neighborhood Centers. The conference, held at Hotel Statler, ended yesterday.

The resolution praised the Supreme Court decision on integration as "one of the milestones in our country's history." "The need for Congress to guarantee the right of franchise to every citizen, take leadership in fair employment practices and in the desegregation of housing, public parks and recreation areas" was urged in the resolution.

Mrs. J. Howard Stephenson of Detroit, was elected president of the conference. Appointment of a national advisory committee was announced. Members include W. Randolph Burgess, Undersecretary of the Treasury; Ezio Pinza, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick and Nicholas Kelley, vice president and director of Chrysler Corp.

Tunnel for Glacier Studied.
TORONTO, May 19 (AP)—A seven-man University of Toronto expedition has gone to the Salmon Glacier in the Coast Range mountains of British Columbia to take depth measurements. The group's leader, Dr. John Jacobs, said the findings might lead to the building of a tunnel through the ice. This would enable mining companies to ship ore via Canada rather than the Alaska panhandle.

CITY DEMOCRATS WIN 2ND DISTRICT FIGHT

County Delegates Beaten in Move to Name Three of Four Delegates.

Regular organization Democrats were elected as delegates and alternates to the Democratic national convention from the St. Louis-St. Louis county Second Congressional District yesterday, as city party members defeated an attempt of county Democrats to name three of the four district delegates.

As expected, the District Democratic convention unanimously adopted a resolution indorsing United States Senator Stuart Symington for the Democratic nomination for President. The meeting was held at Twenty-third Ward Democratic headquarters, 4233 Hampton avenue.

Although the convention strongly backed Symington for the presidency, it sidetracked an effort to have the Missouri Senator named as one of the district's national convention delegates. This was done because Symington is slated to be named a Missouri delegate-at-large by the State Democratic convention May 28 at Jefferson. City

The convention, dominated by the organization leaders, also blocked the naming of Mayor Raymond R. Tucker as an alternate delegate. The mayor was turned down after speakers asserted that Tucker has never expressed any interest in being a delegate, and that there is a possibility that he also will be chosen by the state convention to serve as a delegate-at-large.

The four Second District delegates elected at the meeting are Julius (Biggie) Garagnani, part owner of Stan Musial & Biggie's restaurant; James A. McAteer, clerk of the Circuit Court for Criminal Causes and Democratic committeeman of the Eleventh Ward; Ralph A. Devereaux, chairman of the St. Louis County Democratic Committee, and Mrs. Louise Grant Smith, Democratic committeewoman of Clayton township.

County Democrats also attempted to elect Circuit Judge Noah Weinstein as a delegate. The city representatives at the meeting cast their votes solidly for Garagnini and McAteer, while the county votes were split among the other three candidates. Judge Weinstein received the fewest number of votes and was defeated.

Those named as alternates were George F. Breitenstein, committeeman of Lincoln township; Constable Louis Buckowitz, committeeman of the Tenth Ward; Circuit Clerk Phelim O'Toole, committeeman of the Fourteenth Ward, and Mrs. Irene Becker, committeewoman of the Thirteenth Ward.

The move to name Senator Symington as a district delegate had strong support from the Creve Coeur township representatives at the meeting.

When it was pointed out that Symington was scheduled to be named a delegate-at-large to the national convention, William R. Sommer, Twenty-third Ward committeeman, who was presiding, ruled that Symington was not eligible as a district delegate for that reason. Sommer's ruling was sustained by a vote of the members at the meeting.

Each of the delegates elected yesterday will have one-half vote in the Democratic national 13- in Chicago. The alternates will serve only in the absence of the reguar delegates.

Similar meetings of First and Third Congressional District Democrats to name their delegates and alternates to the national convention will be held Tuesday.

MODIFYING LIGHTS FOR LEFT TURNS TO AWAIT SURVEY

City Official Says Work Will Start as Soon as Traffic Signal Study Is Completed.

Modification of a large number of automatic traffic signals to permit left turns in off-peak hours will get under way as soon as a city-wide survey of signals can be made, Director of Streets and Sewers Frank Kriz told the Post-Dispatch yesterday.

His promise of immediate action followed a demand on the floor of the Board of Aldermen by Chairman A. J. Cervantes of the aldermanic traffic committee that Traffic Commissioner Charles G. Gonter resign unless he was willing to make the signal changes in line with a policy previously agreed on.

Kriz, informed of Cervantes's bitter criticism of Gonter, pointed out that last April 19 he had called on Gonter, who is his subordinate, to make a start on the signals.

e The streets director said yesterday he would get together with Gonter and arrange for a survey of intersections and hire the necessary personnel to do the work.

"If we can't get the skilled labor then we'll have the work done under contract," Kriz added.

He pointed out that in a letter April 19 he told Gonter that of 180 controlled intersections, 130 should be restudied "with a view of adjusting the signals to permit not only local residents but hundreds of tourists to make left turns to get to their destinations as quickly and conveniently as possible.

Critical Locations.

"I believe the most critical locations are along Lindell and Pine boulevards between Grand and Kingshighway, Kingshighway from Oakland avenue south, and Twelfth street from Cole street to Walnut. These I think should receive first consideration.

"I should like to request that you arrange to start this work as soon as practicable."

Outlining the policy on left turns agreed on at a meeting between Kriz and members of the aldermanic traffic committee last March 9, Kriz further instructed Gonter in the letter that signals should be modified so as to permit left turns "in some cases at all times and in most cases during the off-peak hours.

"I think most people agree that left-turn prohibitions between the hours of 7 to 9 a.m. and 4 to 6 p.m. are necessary on arterial streets in order to expedite the movement of traffic. Aside from these hours, I believe our problems are minor."

Remarks 'Fantastic.'

Cervantes, who is head of Laclede Cab Co., told the aldermen Gonter had said to him earlier Friday that the policy on left turns was "all off" and that Gonter's men "won't do the work for me."

Describing Gonter's remarks as "fantastic," Cervantes charged that Gonter "also appears to be saying that a policy fixed by the aldermen — representatives of the people—and by the city administration is just hogwash, and that he intends to handle the situation as he pleases."

Gonter denied to a Post-Dispatch reporter that he had made the remarks Cervantes attributed to him. He said he had told the aldermen the work would have to be done under contract because his own staff was not big enough and had other work with higher priority.

WOMAN IN $171,000 BANK FRAUD GETS FIVE YEARS, FINED

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., May 19 (AP)—A woman bank clerk was sentenced yesterday to five years in prison and fined $5000 for embezzling $171,000 from the Springfield Marine Bank.

United States District Judge Charles G. Briggle sentenced Miss Helen Rose Mulcahey, 53 years old, after denying her request for probation.

Miss Mulcahey had been employed by the bank 34 years. When the shortage was discovered last February, she was in charge of the bank's collection department. She had pleaded not guilty to the charge but later changed the plea to guilty.

SAN SALVADOR, May 19 (UP)—The governing Revolutionary Party of Democratic Unification scored a decisive victory in Sunday's congressional elections, the central electoral council reported yesterday.

Government candidates won a majority in every one of the country's 14 administrative departments, the council said. The national action party was the only one of several opposition groups that did not boycott the elections.

EXEMPTION PLAN FOR POWER FIRMS TO BE SCRAPPED

Bill Involving Holding Company Act Would Apply Only to Early Atomic Work.

WASHINGTON, May 19 (AP) —Senators Charles E. Potter (Rep.), Michigan, and John O. Pastore (Dem.), Rhode Island, announced yesterday they intend to drop the controversial proposal to exempt from the Holding Company Act combinations of public utilities formed to develop power projects too large for any single one.

Potter, sponsor of the electric energy development bill, and Pastore, co-sponsor and chairman of the Senate Commerce subcommittee which is holding hearings on the bill, told witnesses of their plans.

The legislation proposes also to exempt from the Holding Company Act combinations of public utilities formed for atomic power projects.

The two Senators said they intended to rewrite that section so that it would grant exemptions to public utility and industrial concerns only during the research and development stage of the operations.

Pastore first made the announcement during testimony by Andrew J. Biemiller, legislative representative of the AFL-CIO. Biemiller opposed the bill as introduced.

Difference in Sections.

Pastore told Biemiller he had decided that the section which would permit combinations of utility companies formed to build big water power or steam power generating plants "does not spell out the same spirit" as the section aimed "at getting the atomic power program off the ground."

"Under the nuclear program," he continued, "there probably would be no return of profits within 10 or 15 years."

At earlier sessions the committee was told by witnesses that Pacific Northwest Power Co., formed by four Pacific Northwest utilities to build a big hydroelectric development, probably could not go ahead on the present basis unless the proposed legislation was passed.

Senator Warren Magnuson (Dem.), Washington, brought out at yesterday's hearing that the Securities and Exchange Commission had said that so far as it knew the primary immediate effect of the bill would be to exempt the four companies from the Holding Company Act.

List of Companies.

The companies are Washington Water Power Co., Pacific Power & Light Co., Montana Power Co. and Portland General Electric Co.

Witnesses for the Edison Electric Institute and many power companies have testified for the legislation.

Leland Olds, former chairman of the Federal Power Commission and head of Energy Research Associates, and Wallace J. Campbell, director of the Washington office of the Co-operative League of the U.S.A., opposed any change in the Holding Company Act.

Angus McDonald, representing the National Farmers Union, said the proposed changes apparently would render the legislation harmless but he asked the opportunity to submit a statement after study.

Harry A. Poth Jr., Washington lawyer appearing for Minnesota Power & Light Co. in behalf of the section which the Senators said they were dropping, told Pastore "I feel like the lawyer who is appearing to argue a case and finds he is rather in the position of seeking a retrial."

FAMILIES CANNOT USE VA HOSPITALS, DOCTOR SAYS

Families of veterans are not entitled to free Veterans Administration hospitalization, Dr. Lester Drubin, manager of the Jefferson Barracks Hospital, said yesterday.

"The law does not permit us to hospitalize dependents of veterans," he explained, "except for those so-called humanitarian cases who are brought to us in emergencies because our hospitals are the closest to the scene of the emergency." Even then, he added, such cases are billed for whatever care and treatment they have received.

Only veterans may be hospitalized by the Veterans Administration, and then only under certain circumstances, Dr. Drubin said.

MAX BEERBOHM, 83, BRITISH AUTHOR, DIES

Satirist's Death Preceded by Circulatory Collapse in Italy.

RAPALLO, Italy, May 19 (UP)—British Writer Sir Max Beerbohm died in his sleep tonight after murmuring the words "grazia per tutto"—thanks for everything.

Death came to the 83-year-old satirist at the Santa Chiara clinic after a long illness.

Beerbohm's doctor, Giuseppe Bacigalupo, said the author spoke his parting words, "grazia per tutto," just before he slipped into a coma. He suffered a circulatory collapse last night. He suffered from a combination of gout, asthma and circulatory difficulties which weakened his heart.

Beerbohm, who in 1898 followed George Bernard Shaw as drama critic for the Saturday Review, moved to Rapallo on the Italian Riviera in 1910 for reasons of health. He was well known for his dapper dress as well as for his writings.

His works included "The Works of Max Beerbohm," "The Happy Hypocrite," "Zuleika Dobson," "Seven Men," and "Even Now."

Beerbohm was born in London Aug. 24, 1872, the son of a London merchant of German-Lithuanian-Dutch ancestry.

He attended Charterhouse school and then Merton College, Oxford. Before he left Oxford Beerbohm was a prominent figure on the English literary scene. His witty pen, whether writing satire or drawing caricature, was favored by the public and feared by public figures, including the British royal family.

The knighthood he received in 1939 was regarded as much a tribute to the broadmindedness of British officialdom as to Beerbohm's literary powers.

His fame gave him entrance into England's mansions, and he was a friend of the highest artistic, political and social figures of the time.

Even as a young man his clothes were as elegant as his prose. There was always a touch of the dandy about him, with his fresh boutonniere and modish hat set at a rakish angle.

In 1910 he married the American actress Florence Kahn, of Memphis, Tenn. She died in 1951.

MEETING ON JOB PROBLEMS OF APPLICANTS OVER 45

A conference on the employment problems of the older worker will be held from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Wednesday at the Sheraton-Jefferson Hotel under the auspices of the Adult Education Department of St. Louis University, it was announced yesterday.

The conference, attended by business executives, industrial and labor leaders, personnel men and company representatives, will consist of presentation and discussion of the problems faced by unemployed workers over 45 years of age.

The discussion will be based on the results of a "Man Marketing Clinic" which was held on April 14 in order to determine the reasons why older workers have difficulty in obtaining employment. Representatives from business and industry interviewed about 500 workers from this age group at the clinic.

STEEL UNION WILL DISOWN 'LABOR PARTY,' CHIEF SAYS

CHICAGO, May 19 (UP)—David J. McDonald, president of the United Steelworkers, served notice yesterday that his union will have no part in organizing any "so-called" labor party.

"We shall not be the pawns of any labor politicians who desire to create a so-called labor party in our country," he said.

McDonald told a conference of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners that union leaders are "mere pawns in the hands of politicians who control the labor party" in other countries where such parties are organized. He said also the steelworkers will not "ride the coattails of any political party." He praised a poster displayed at the carpenters' meeting which read "Vote for the friends of labor. No party monopolizes our favor."

AWARDS TO BEGIN IN FALL FOR ACCOUNTING STUDENTS

Annual awards to students and teachers of accounting will be started this fall by the Haskins & Sells Foundation, it was announced yesterday.

A student in each of some 40 colleges will receive a $500 award for scholastic excellence. Five universities will receive $1000 grants to assist accounting instructors while they take graduate work.

Arthur B. Foye, president of the foundation, said that arrangements for the awards have been made with a number of colleges, and as soon as details have been completed the entire list of institutions will be announced. The foundation was established in 1928 by the accounting firm of Haskins & Sells to advance accountancy through educational and research projects.

BRANNAN ENTERS SENATE PRIMARY RACE IN COLORADO

DENVER, May 19 (AP)—Charles F. Brannan, Secretary of Agriculture in the Truman Cabinet and author of the Brannan farm plan, entered the race today for the United States Senate seat from Colorado held by veteran Republican Eugene D. Millikin.

Brannan, 52 years old, is the first candidate to announce for the Democratic senatorial nomination and will pitch part of his campaign on farm policies of the Eisenhower administration.

His statement of candidacy avoided specific reference to the agricultural question but said the nation "must preserve and extend the opportunity for all the people to share in the benefits of our expanding economy." He made the announcement in a letter to Democratic State Chairman Fred M. Betz of Lamar.

Millikin, 65 years old, is a veteran of 14 years in the Senate. Despite an illness which sidelined him for several months last winter, he has told reporters he is available for nomination to another six-year Senate term if the Republicans want him.

Brannan is making his first bid for elective office and may have opposition for nomination at the Sept. 11 primary from John A. Carroll of Denver, former Congressman and one-time Truman adviser on congressional affairs.

Truman in Europe; People Of France and Italy Busy

against the big German gun that was dropping shells into the city from 75 miles away. There were very few people in the streets and those who were looked drab and unhappy. This time everybody seemed to be well dressed, well fed and very gay.

I've been asked whether the average Frenchman is upset by the recurrent crises in government today; from my observations I wouldn't say the Frenchmen on the streets seemed to care about the troubles of government.

No: the French people of 1918 were not the gay people they appear to be today. When I returned to Paris in March 1919, to collect the regimental baggage, every family in France mourned the loss of a close loved one—either a son, brother or husband. They could not be gay and they weren't.

Now they seem to have regained the traditional gaiety of the past. Most seem to have forgotten the bitter experience of World War II and the sad memories of the German occupation.

Warm Reception.

The reception given me here in Europe has been as warm and friendly as that of any American crowd before which I ever appeared—in Le Havre when we docked, in Paris, at places along the route in Italy, and finally in Rome. It was very heart-warming.

The greeting in Rome, in fact, was so enthusiastic that I had to go back to my return to Washington in 1948 to recall an equal.

A reception like that makes a fellow feel humble and inadequate. You know that the people are paying their tribute not to an individual but to the great country which he represents.

It's their way of saying, "Thank you," for what the American people have done in the way of help.

When I was President I was acting for the American people and not for me as an individual. No President can operate on an international level without the support of the majority of the people at home.

I was the occupant of the greatest office in the history of the world and I did what I did because I knew it was right and the people wanted it that way. The people were 100 per cent for the recovery program. Then and now, I want the people of Europe to remain friendly to us.

I never had any idea that these things were done by me as an individual, and today I don't have any idea that the cheers are for me as an individual.

The European people are not interested in me but in the great country that was their friend when they needed help.

Same Press Inquiries.

One of the amusing sidelights of this trip has been the behavior of the newspaper men who met me in Paris and Rome. The press in these two cities must have been in communication with the reporters in the United States.

They ask the same questions that the reporters do back in America. But I can understand their deep interest in what goes on in our country, because what happens in the United States affects the whole world.

The Italian photographers did something which I've never seen before. On motor-powered scooters, they rush ahead of you, twist and turn in traffic and gaily snap pictures from straight ahead of your moving car. Picture-taking for them seems to be a sport. Watching them in action made me wish I could ride on these scooters. But I know I can't.

The French motorcycle police, now that I think of it, had a few funny tricks of their own. When they took us to the station in Paris, one rode in front of us blowing a musical horn. Behind us came another with a whistle. When anyone got in our way, they simply reached out and pushed them aside. They looked as if they had been trained at Fort Riley to ride like that—and I told them so.

Daylight Italian Trips.

The train trip across Italy was in Daylight from about Genoa on to Rome, and we had a good chance to see the country. It looked as if the crops were coming along in fine shape and I observed with interest that the Italian farmers were using lots of white oxen in the fields.

I saw small mules pulling large loads of hay—loads that appeared far too big for them. Mrs. Truman noticed that there were many women working in the fields. I told her to remember that when she got home.

We were distressed by the tragic sight of so many frost-ruined olive trees. Tens of thousands of them were killed by the bad winter. It's the kind of damage that is not easily repaired.

We did have one big difficulty in seeing the farm country. Our train kept going through tunnels, and I would guess that there are more tunnels in that area than on the whole Baltimore & Ohio.

At this stage of the trip I already foresee that I'm facing certain difficulties. For a while, at least, I know I won't be able to take my morning walks. The ligament in my ankle, which I pulled about 10 days before leaving America, is healing, but slowly. I still have to favor it. What gets me is that I have to deny myself the pleasure of strolling through the historic landmarks that are within walking distance of my hotel. This is going to be a disappointment. However, we've overcome other disappointments before getting this trip under way.

Invitation to Hawaii.

To go back to the beginning, after we left the White House, Mrs. Truman and I, along with our daughter Margaret, were invited by my friend Edwin W. Pauley to a month on Coconut Island just off the north coast of Oahu, in the Hawaiian Islands.

When we arrived home in Independence from that trip, I found an invitation from Lord Halifax to come to Oxford for an honorary degree. Because I had to write my presidential memoirs, I asked for a postponement.

The invitation was renewed in 1954, but an obstreperous gall bladder, which I had to have removed, prevented my taking the trip then. When the invitation was extended again in 1955, I accepted for June 1956.

Preparations were already under way when Margaret informed us that she had found a great man—and she had—and that she wanted to be married at home in Independence on April 21, 1956. The wedding took place as she had planned it and to the satisfaction of her mother, her father, Clifton Daniel's mother and father and, apparently, of the whole nation.

Many Invitations.

As soon as the wedding was over, Mrs. Truman and I resumed our preparations for the trip. When it was announced that we would go to Europe, invitations from the wonderful people who had visited us officially and unofficially while we were in the White House began to arrive from across the Atlantic.

The last few days were hectic. In assembling my individual luggage I was coming down the stairs, missed a step and that raised havoc with my ligament.

We had a series of luncheons, dinners and receptions on the way to New York and I was twice given birthday parties, with birthday cakes and all the trimmings.

The old Atlantic, for a change, was as smooth as the Pacific, and the sun shone as brightly as in Honolulu. It was quite a different crossing from the one I made in 1918. Then we had left New York on the George Washington—one of the confiscated German ships—at midnight the day before Easter Sunday. There were very few lights, just a few showing here and there, but we were able to see the Statue of Liberty as we went by. I was billeted on the deck with four other first lieutenants, and we decided if we managed to come back from the war, Miss Liberty would have to turn around if she wanted to see us again.

This was the first time I had seen her since then.

1945 Trip to Potsdam.

In the summer of 1945, I went to Potsdam. This time I left Norfolk, Va., in the U.S.S. Augusta, which took me as far as Antwerp. At Antwerp I was flown in the old DC-4 known as the Sacred Cow to Berlin and the Potsdam conference. I had no idea with what I would be faced when I met with Winston Churchill, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, and Generalissimo Joseph Stalin, Premier of the Soviet Union. But I had an agenda for consideration at that meeting, which neither of the other gentlemen had.

It was quite an experience. When the conference finished and the protocol document was signed, I returned to Plymouth, England, where I was entertained at luncheon on the British cruiser Renown by King George VI. We had a most pleasant conference and King George returned my visit by coming to the Augusta for a further conference. I was very much impressed by his knowledge of affairs and his very pleasant personality.

This trip, I know, will be a much more pleasant one than either of the others, even with the bothersome ligament. I know that I am not going to be able to see the ordinary folk I would like to see in the countries we visit. The language difficulty is not the only reason. It is simply that they would not talk to me as they would to the ordinary tourist.

But I am looking forward to seeing and talking with many of our friends, official and unofficial, who have extended invitations to us in all countries.

Anticipating Vatican Visit.

I am particularly anticipating a very pleasant visit with His Holiness the Pope. I have had a great deal of correspondence with him during the war years and in the immediate postwar period of reconstruction.

I know that his over-all interest is world peace. The correspondence between us was extremely interesting because the Pope is very interesting.

As might have been expected, several people have asked me questions dealing with American foreign policy. I have not answered such questions, not because I don't have opinions on various topics, but because I do not think the place to express them is outside the United States.

The world knows that the President of the United States is responsible for our foreign policy, and no American should attempt to embarrass him in this field while abroad. No one should attempt to pull the rug from under him. It happened to me when I was President, and I know how it feels.

That is why I am steering away from generalizations and sticking to reporting my own personal impressions and observations. I may have a few things to say about what I've seen when I arrive back in the United States, but that is the place to say them, not over here.

Last Hope of Free World.

The United States is the last hope of the free world. What I have seen up to now on the present trip has in no way diminished by belief that the whole free world can and will work together for the cause of peace. Some day the United Nations will work in the way it was intended to work, and then you will see the greatest increase in the standard of living for hundreds of millions of people that mankind ever witnessed.

If the machinery could be devised to raise the standard of living in the world by only 3 per cent, it would keep the plants and factories in the United States and in all the other industrial countries working continuously at an unparalleled rate to meet the demand for their products.

That is what we have to keep aiming for, and what I've seen in France and Italy makes me think that with God's help the job can be done.

WILSON PROMISES INQUIRY IN ARMY, AIR FORCE FIGHT

year's Air Force budget came from Gen. Nathan Twining, Chief of Staff of the Air Force, when he testified with obviously some reluctance that current appropriations were barely sufficient for minimum air security but only on condition that the amount next year would be very much larger. Twining testified also, in reply to a direct question that in his opinion the strategic striking power of the Navy's giant aircraft carriers was "small."

Long-Standing Difference.

This touched the fringes of a long-standing service difference. Noting the Twining testimony, Senator Stuart Symington of Missouri whose doubts of the effectiveness of the carriers in modern warfare go back to his own service as the first Secretary of Air under "unification," promptly called friends in the Air Force to say that this seemed to open an opportunity for some plain talking about the value of the giant carriers. Symington is chairman of a Senate subcommittee investigating deficiencies in the Air Force and in the development of guided missiles.

But Symington's Air Force friends were cautious. Knowing the strict bar imposed at the top of any talk of service differences, they pointed out that any frank appraisal from the Air Force point of view would have to come as a result of questions carefully framed to bring out the facts as top airmen see them.

Symington himself is a very cautious man and whether he would deliberately invite testimony which would step on powerful toes both in the military establishment and in industry is doubtful.

His investigation has for a variety of reasons, including security and secrecy, seemed to function under layers of wraps largely muffling its impact. The chief objective is to determine why more is not being spent on air power and missile research, and this merely skirts the basic issue of the old service rivalry over whacking up the defense budget.

Gen. LeMay a Critic.

One of the most persistent critics of the giant carriers which, with their complement of cruisers, destroyers and submarines, cost billions of dollars, is Gen. Curtis LeMay, chief of the Strategic Air Command. The Air Force has determined through secret radar reconnaissance that the Forrestal, first of the giant carriers, can be detected at a distance of more than 200 miles. Not only that, but the radar screen shows at that distance from the wake of the Forrestal in which direction the great ship is moving.

Part of the Navy's claim for the carriers is speed and secrecy enabling them to operate even in narrow costal waters. Within the Air Force the conviction is strong that this radar reconnaissance has refuted the Navy claim.

Those close to the Symington committee believe testimony could be developed to disprove the more extravagant claims made by Secretary of Navy Charles Thomas that planes from the big carriers could strike any target in the Soviet Union. It is reported that carefully drawn maps exist which give the carriers every possible break in relation to enemy detection and attack and yet show that the carrier planes fall far short of the major Soviet industrial and atomic complex.

Army vs. Air Force.

As the dispute over the carriers simmers beneath the surface, the major controversy today involves the Army and the Air Force. While both are claiming the development and use of guided missiles, the difference is deeper than merely rivalry over who does what. It goes down to disagreement over the short war versus the long war; over preparation for nuclear war versus preparation for small peripheral wars.

It is well illustrated by a dispute current in the Joint Chiefs of Staff over stockpiling. The Army is insisting on a four-year stockpile which would include not only supplies but tanks and other costly weapons. The Air Force argues that this would be a fantastic waste since a general nuclear war would be ended within a few weeks with ports and other facilities of each combatant destroyed in this first decisive phase.

The Air Force therefore argues for a three-month stockpile. But the Army comes back in heated JCS sessions to insist that the four-year stockpile is essential in view of the likelihood of peripheral wars under a nuclear stalemate. The reply of the Air Force is that with the present industrial base for production of military supplies, a small war or even two or three small wars could be supplied with an expanded productive system after the war began.

Question of Air Defense.

Another and even more fundamental difference between the two services is over air defense. The Army is claiming its share while the Air Force argues that this function must come under one service as it does in both Great Britain and the Soviet Union. Only in that way, so the Air Force argument goes, can ground and air defenses be properly meshed one with the other.

Basic to the Army-Air Force controversy is the competing claim to various phases of missile research and development. There are today 37 different missile projects divided among the three services and, while a case can be made for the advantages of competition, it is here that waste and duplication are most costly.

Three months ago Secretary Wilson with considerable publicity fanfare named Eger Murphree, a distinguished scientist-engineer with the American Telephone and Telegraph Co., to be the so-called czar over guided missiles. This was after the resignation of the assistant secretary for research and development, Trevor Gardner, had been forced because of his criticism of the inadequacy of the missile program.

Two items in the new Air Force budget illustrate the way new defense costs grow, particularly when they are piled on top of all the old costs. One is the construction of the new DEW radar defense line in northern Canada. The likelihood is that this will cost twice the original estimates—that is to say several hundred million dollars more than had first been calculated. When the line is completed on the edge of the Arctic, the cost of maintaining men and delicate electronic listening devices under conditions of extreme cold and frost will be considerably greater than estimated.

Plane Dispersal Program

The second item, if an expenditure involving hundreds of millions can be so called, is for an increase in the number of Strategic Air Command bases in this country so that SAC planes may for safety reasons be more widely dispersed. After a long hassle in the National Security Council—and incidentally the whole process of NSC policy approval seems to be more and more prolonged—the SAC dispersal program was approved.

Small numbers of planes are to be put on satellite bases near enough to main operating bases so that service can be performed on the latter without a duplication of service facilities. The concentration of planes on a relatively few SAC bases has been a cause for grave concern for several years.

Secretary Wilson has already spent many hours going over the new Air Force budget. Military men who work with him say that he has a thorough knowledge of the intricacies of budget-making and he is extremely conscientious in examining each separate item.

But more often than not this comes down to what men in uniform call nit-picking or fly specking. The Secretary's blue pencil falls on this item and that item and finally he says, "Nope, no more money for research and development; you've got all you can spend in a year." This cuts down the total amount, but it creates gaping holes in a program carefully worked out through long planning.

Whittling Feared.

Certainly it is far short of the over-all unified approach to America's security needs in the nuclear era that this moment of revolutionary change seems to call for. It is the fear particularly of men in uniform in the Air Force that under the impetus of disarmament, with the example set by Soviet Russia in the 1,200,000 force reduction, and economy and budget balancing in this country, all the services will be whittled down proportionately.

This will seriously impair the main deterrent of the Strategic Air Command. It will leave the three services with considerable less than what each feels that it must do alone.

The lid of silence which has been held tightly on the Pentagon under Secretary Wilson may be jammed on again following these revelations. They broke ironically enough coincidental with Armed Forces day which in the past has been used to advertise the alleged untiy of the three services. While unification has meant economies at some levels, the fact is that it has not actually taken place.

WARNING OF FUND SLASH BY CHAVEZ

WASHINGTON, May 19 (AP)—After unnamed sources, evidently within the Army, passed documents to reporters charging that present emphasis on air power could lead only to "national disaster," Senator Chavez (Dem.), New Mexico, chairman of a Senate Defense Appropriations Committee, warned today that Congress might cut the funds of the armed forces unless "petty jealousies" are done away with. "They ought to quit being prima donnas and work for our common purpose, the defense of our country," he said.

Sharply worded staff studies circulating in the Pentagon were quoted today in several newspapers, including the New York Times, New York Herald-Tribune and St. Paul Pioneer Press. Some represent the views of individual staff officers, some the settled official opinion of an armed service.

One Army paper said:

"Although we have expended a large share of our national resources for military and related purposes, our outlay has not been correctly related to the nature of the threat. The President has said that thermonuclear war is 'unthinkable.' He has called for the ability to meet a variety of threats short of all-out war, for this is the probable danger.

Fund Pleas Cited.

"Yet we continue to pour excessive manpower and money into an air force which has been substantially neutralized and which pleads for more money, more money, more money. We continue to divert large quantities of our military manpower into a Navy that is seriously threatened by a nation with practically no naval experience or tradition."

This was a reference to Russia, with its large fleets of submarines.

There were also contentions that the Air Force and the Navy do not have needed capacities to transport and supply Army forces. It was argued that under present policies the United States is not preparing properly to fight wars that fall short of total war—with the result that the country may be "forced into either total war or subjugation."

Another paper from the Army said:

"Foreign policy dependent primarily on air forces can only be correspondingly rigid and inflexible. Policy choice is restricted to the extremes of inaction or action which may be wholly inappropriate. Under such conditions a nation's military power becomes more a determinant of national policy than an instrument of it."

With regard to this paper, the Army today issued a statement saying: "This is an old staff working paper, an attempt on the part of one individual (staff officer) to analyze service differences. This paper was never approved and it is not official."

U.S. BUSINESS MAN FINALLY QUITS CHINA

Reds Allow Him to Leave 5½ Years After He Asked Permission.

HONG KONG, May 19 (AP) —Charles S. Miner, an American businessman ,came out of Communist China today — 5½ years after he asked for permission to leave. He was not imprisoned and said he had been treated all right.

Accompanied by his Chinese wife, Miner, 50 years old, formerly of Washington, D.C., arrived from Shanghai aboard a British freighter.

He went to China in 1948 as an insurance man and became the representative of the American-owned Evening Post and Mercury and six other U.S.-owned companies in Shanghai.

In November 1950, Miner applied for a permit to leave, but it was not until three months ago he was able to sign contracts with the Chinese Communist government closing out the businesses. Two weeks ago he and his wife received their exit permits.

"Shanghai is a commercial graveyard, as the present program calls for elimination of private business," he said.

The process of forcing out all private businesses—foreign as well as Chinese—is a slow one, Miner said, "letting them wring themselves out until they are as dry as a dishrag and nothing is left."

Miner said the Communists are moving heavy industries out of Shanghai into the countryside.

"Some say the Reds want to cut the Shanghai population in half because there is just no business," he declared.

Miner said he and hsi wife, formerly Maria Wong, plan to go to the United States in a few weeks.

QUITS AS DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION MANAGER

CHICAGO, May 19 (UP)—William Neal Roach last night admitted he has resigned as convention manager for the Democratic National Committee. He said he quit the position two weeks ago after organizing Democratic conventions in 1948 and 1952. At the time of his resignation, Roach had preparations well under way for the August convention in Chicago.

Roach, 43 years old, of Bethesda, Md., refused to explain the reasons for his resignation. He also declined to say why he was in Chicago but said he would return to Bethesda today.

In Washington, a spokesman for the Democratic National Committee said Roach resigned for "strictly personal reasons." He said everyone on the committee was happy with Roach's work. It would be up to Roach, he said to say what the "personal reasons" were.)

Roach apparently will continue to serve as assistant to party chairman Paul M. Butler.

FIVE IN FLORIDA SENATE PAY-OFF CASE CONVICTED

Lawmaker, Suspended Sheriff and 3 Aids Found Guilty of Perjury Over Primary.

BARTOW, Fla., May 19 (AP)—A six-man criminal court jury convicted State Senator Harry King, suspended Sheriff Pat Gordon and their three co-dependants of all perjury counts in the Polk County Senate race pay-off case.

Judge Roy Amidon did not immediately pronounce sentence. Notice for motions for a new trial was given by all defendants and Amidon allowed until May 24 to file these motions.

The charges arose from a grand jury investigation of a report by State Representative Boone Tillett that King paid him $10,000 to withdraw from the State Senate race.

Convicted on 4 Counts.

King was convicted on two counts of subornation of perjury and two counts of conspiracy to commit perjury. He could receive a maximum sentence of 42 years. The jury recommended mercy for all defendants on all counts, however.

Gordon likewise was convicted on two counts of subornation and two counts of conspiracy and also could be sentenced to 42 years.

James Busbee, a suspended sheriff's deputy, was convicted on one count of perjury and two counts of conspiracy for which the maximum is 22 years.

Another suspended deputy, Rollie Arnold, was convicted on the same counts as Busbee.

Santell Monk, suspended jailer, was convicted on two counts of conspiracy to commit perjury and could be sentenced to two years.

The grand jury accused Busbee and Arnold of swearing falsely that they saw King and Tillett at the payoff scene on the night of Feb. 4.

The case was in court when the race for the senate seat came before the voters and both King and Tillett were badly beaten in the first primary by Scott Kelly. King's term does not expire until after the November general elections.

Both men have admitted that the $10,000 was paid.

Called 'Scheming Plan.'

Defense attorneys argued that Tilley actually wanted King's seat in the Senate and had followed a "cool, calculated, scheming plan to bring this man (King) into disgrace."

The state argued, however, that Tillett had acted forthrightly in the payoff, transacted part of the plan in the presence of Circuit Judge Don Register, counted the money before two prominent men and gave it to one for safekeeping and, finally, had notified proper authorities.

Monk was indicted on a charge of altering jail records to support the stories of Busbee and Arnold.

POLISH REFUGEE TELLS OF EFFORT TO LURE HIM BACK

Sailor Testifies Embassy Official Used Letter From Wife That Someone Dictated.

WASHINGTON, May 19 (UP)—A refuge Polish sailor said a Polish Embassy official tried to lure him back behind the Iron Curtain with a "dictated" letter from his wife, Senate investigators disclosed today.

Another sailor told of a mysterious caller who urged him to go home, but left in confusion when he learned the seaman was making good wages.

They said three other sailors had been enticed home—at least one of them reluctantly.

The two refugee Poles, who now live in New Britain, Conn., testified in a closed Senate Internal Security subcommittee hearing yesterday under the assumed names of George Filipiak and Zenon Dudek. Their testimony was made public today. They said they entered the United States in 1954 after their ships had been seized by the Chinese Nationalists on Formosa.

The subcommittee is investigating the Communist campaign to persuade refugees from the Soviet bloc to change their minds and return home.

Filipiak said Eugene Szczepanik, an official of the Polish Embassy in Washington, awakened him on Sunday morning last October in New Britain.

(The Polish Embassy told the United Press that Szczepanik is a "non-diplomatic" employe of its consular section.)

"He started to talk to me and said that I should go back to Poland," Filipiak testified. "I said I wouldn't want to go back to Poland, and I don't want to talk."

He said Szczepanik gave him a sealed letter from his wife and letters to three other Polish sailors from their families, and left.

"In my letter, I think it was dictated," Filipiak said. "My wife was writing, but it was dictated by somebody."

Dudek said he had been getting "forced" letters from his wife and father in Poland.

He said a man came to his house in New Britain April 28 but would not identify himself.

Dudek testified that his visitor said, "Those who returned to Poland told us that we are being treated here on a very low level."

"So I showed him my paychecks from the employer . . . and he was very surprised when he saw that," said Dudek.

He said his caller told him, "Oh, I am very sorry . . . we can talk about it some other time. I am sorry I came over," and left quickly.

Japanese Volcano Erupts.

KUSHIRO, Japan, May 19 (AP)—Mount Meakan belched a dense black cloud of smoke today, its third eruption since November. The 4780-foot Hokkaido island volcano subsided after 90 minutes.

RHEE CONCEDES ELECTION OF FOE AS VICE PRESIDENT

SEOUL, May 19 (AP)—President Syngman Rhee conceded today that a bitter political opponent had defeated his hand-picked candidate for the vice presidency.

"Although I cannot officially announce the outcome, I think Chang Myun has been elected," Rhee said in a statement. "Since the will of the people has been reflected in the election, I will carry out my duty in accordance with the people's will."

Two Seoul newspapers which have been critical of Rhee's administration but are not considered opposition, said the Rhee cabinet would resign en masse but government leaders denied this.

One paper, Hangkook Ilbo, said Liberal party leaders were embarrassed that Rhee had polled only 52 per cent of the presidential vote when they had predicted 80 per cent.

Chang has a nationwide lead of 86,380 votes over Lee Ki Poong, Rhee's running mate. Chang's Democratic party ran P. H. Schinicky for president but Shinicky died while campaigning.

CLEO V. BARNHART ELECTED TO JUDICIAL COMMISSION

Cleo V. Barnhart, an attorney, has been elected to the Eighth Circuit judicial commission replacing the late Harold Hecker, Circuit Clerk Phelim O'Toole announced yesterday.

O'Toole said Barnhart received 393 votes to 290 for Norris H. Allen in a runoff election conducted among lawyers. Barnhart lives at 5449 Donovan avenue and has an office in the Chemical Building, 721 Olive street. The commission nominates candidates to fill circuit bench vacancies under Missouri's nonpartisan court plan.

ASKS COMMITTEE CHECK ALLEGED GIFT TO SENATOR

Dakota Editor Says Brownell Has Proof Young Got Grunewald $5000.

BISMARCK, N. D., May 19 (AP)—A North Dakota political newspaper in controversy with Senator Milton R. Young (Rep.), North Dakota, before a special Senate committee, has asked chairman John L. McClellan (Dem.), Arkansas, to order before the committee an instrument that it says covered a $5000 fund transfer to Young.

K. W. Simons, associate editor of the newspaper's board, has been ordered to appear before the Select Committee on Lobbying and Political Contributions in Washington Thursday, at Young's request. Simons made the demand in a letter to McClellan.

Simons sent a copy of the McClellan letter to Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr., in whose custody he told the committee chairman is "a certain cashier's check, personal check, draft or bank money order" for $5000, drawn on the personal account of Henry (the Dutchman) Grunewald in the Munsey Trust Co. of Washington, "payable to Senator Milton R. Young or his representatives."

The committee agreed to a request by Young that it consider an investigation into an article published last Feb. 9 in the Leader, organ of the Nonpartisan League, a political faction about what it described as a contribution by Grunewald to Young's 1950 primary election campaign.

Young said he wanted a hearing to "clear my name."

The committee said a closed session Thursday with Young and Simons present would determine whether a public hearing will be held.

The Leader article in the paper's Feb. 9 issue said Young's support of a natural gas bill and a contribution reported as rejected by Senator Francis Case (Rep.), South Dakota, in connection with that measure, recalled that in 1950 "Henry the Dutchman Grunewald slipped $5000 to Milt Young to help him finance his last campaign."

Grunewald was convicted last year on charges of conspiring to fix federal income tax prosecution cases.

In his letter to McClellan, Simons asked that the committee subpena John Tobin, former counsel for the House Ways and Means subcommittee on Internal Revenue investigation. Tobin now is connected with a New York law firm.

Young, who is seeking reelection this year, is opposed for his Senate seat by Quentin Burdick of Fargo, indorsee of the Nonpartisan League, which is filing its candidates in the Democratic column.

COMPANY OUSTS CHEMIST WHO ADMITS HE WAS SPY

NEWARK, N.J., May 19 (AP)—Thomas L. Black, who testified he worked for the FBI after spying for Russia, has been dismissed from the Atlas Refining Co. plant, where he was working on assignment as a chemist.

Arthur F. Schreoder Jr., president of the Atlas firm, said today Black was ordered out of the Newark factory yesterday, 24 hours after he divulged to the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee he had spied for th eSoviets.

Black, who testified he recruited imprisoned atomic spy Harry Gold into a Soviet spy ring, actually is employed as a chemist by the P. H. Hellie Co., sales representatives, of Worcester, Mass., and has been assigned to work at Atlas Refining Co. Hellie Co. has a sales contract with Atlas.

"We called Mr. Hellie," Schroeder said, "and told him we would have to take the position that Black could no longer work with our facilities."

FRENCH REDS FACE CHARGES FOR RIOT OVER TROOP ORDER

GRENOBLE, France, May 19 (AP)—Government officials said today they plan to bring charges against the local Communist party for unlawful assembly following a wild demonstration last night protesting against the departure of French troops for Algeria.

Sixty policemen and at least 11 of the demonstrators were injured. Fifty-nine persons were arrested and it is expected they too will be charged with unlawful assembly. The nationalized railway company plans to file complaints charging sabotage of its property.

The 500 troops who had been scheduled to leave for North Africa service were taken back to barracks in the Grenable area and were still there today awaiting new orders.

U.S. PILOT KILLED IN CRASH IN AIR SHOW IN GERMANY

FRANKFURT, Germany, May 19 (AP) — Tragedy marred American Armed Forces day in Germany today. A United States Air Force jet fighter crashed during a formation flyby, killing the pilot.

Witnesses said the fighter flamed out at low altitude at Hahn Air Base and crashed, exploding on impact. The pilot's name was withheld pending notification of kin.

In Frankfurt, police reported American jets engaged in an aerial display, dropped a 200-gallon reserve fuel tank over a densely populated residential area. There were no casualties and no damage. The tank, whistling down like a bomb, caused some panic.

MAN BURIED UP TO HIS NECK STILL THINKS OF EMPLOYES

DECATUR, Ill., May 19 (AP)—A sewer contractor, caught in a cave-in of an excavation, was buried up to his neck for more than an hour yesterday.

PLAY MENTIONS PIGEONS, SO ONE PLOPS ON STAGE

LONDON, May 19 (UP)—A pigeon broke up a rehearsal of Shakespeare's "As You Like It" today—right on cue.

Just as Actress Rosemary Wallace spoke the lines, "Here comes Monsieur LeBeau," a young pigeon plopped to the stage. It had been dislodged from its nest by electricians stringing lights at the Regent Park outdoor theater.

Another actress continued: "With his mouth full of news . . . which he will put on us as pigeons feed their young."

The bewildered pigeon blinked at the lights as the rehearsal dissolved in laughter.

SUKARNO'S VISIT CALLED A PART OF 'WAR OF SMILES'

Indonesia's Largest Paper Says Russia and U.S. Are Competing to Win Favors.

JAKARTA, May 19 (AP)—Indonesia's largest newspaper took a jaundiced view today of President Sukarno's visit to the United States and said it was only part of a "war of sweet smiles."

Indonesian political leaders, however, said they were "certain Indonesia would benefit from the success of the presidential tour." They said United States policy toward Asia, Indonesia in particular, undoubtedly would be "more positive" as a result of the visit.

Keng Po, independent Chinese-owned daily and largest in circulation, said the visit was the result of the "war of sweet smiles" between Russia and the United States. The two powers, it explained, "are competing with each other to win favors."

"From his gestures and speeches it seems that President Sukarno is trying to convince the American leaders he is a stanch adherent to the principles of democracy and state organization, very close to the ideologies of Washington, Jefferson and Lincoln," said Keng Po.

"When Sukarno visits Moscow (next fall) will he not possibly also express agreement with the doctrines of Marx and Lenin?

"Exchanges of sweet speeches and smiles are good for public consumption, not for experienced politicians. Of interest to the latter is what Sukarno, (President) Eisenhower and other American policy makers will discuss behind closed doors."

The nationalist paper Merdeka stoutly defended the tour, saying the United States would discover that Sukarno was "one of Asia's most influential leaders." It expressed hope the United States would reappraise its stand on the Dutch-Indonesian dispute over West New Guinea (Irian) as a result of the visit.

The Communist organ, Harian Rakjat, also praised Sukarno's statements in the United States, including his "condemnation of colonialism, demand for liberation of West Irian, cessation of nuclear weapons tests and recommendation of economic cooperation without political strings."

Dutch Paper Says U.S. Turned Back on Western Civilization.

AMSTERDAM, May 19 (UP) — The Dutch newspaper De Telegraf said today United States adulation of Indonesian President Sukarno makes it appear official Washington has turned its back on western civilization and its traditions of truth and justice.

The newspaper expressed amazement at American praise of a man who it said caused the death of hundreds of thousands of his countrymen by collaborating with the Japanese enemies of the United States in World War II.

It called on the Dutch Government to use all the means at its disposal to "defend us against American policy."

"The United States is hard at work to disavow the West, its civilization, its respect for truth and justice, in a word the culture of the western world," De Telegraf said.

"A man is celebrated there who caused the deaths of hundreds of thousands of defenseless compatriots by forcing them to fight with the Japanese against the West. . . .

"The Vice President of the United States publicly compares Sukarno with George Washington . . . a man who, by his one-sided denunciation of an agreement for which the United States was responsible (the Dutch-Indonesian union), ridiculed international law."

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., May 19 (UP)—The "feasibility" of competitive electric power from nuclear energy is no longer in doubt, says Dr. R. A. Charpie, assistant director of the Oak Ridge National Laboratory.

Charpie, speaking last night at a banquet of the Tennessee automation conference, said "right now" the major obstacles in obtaining this system have been overcome and the remaining questions to be solved "are largely technical."

TRADE DIP, UPTURN FORECAST THIS YEAR

Top Industrialists Expect Record Output After Third Quarter Drop.

HOT SPRINGS, Va., May 19 (AP)—The business pattern for the rest of 1956, as seen by the country's top industrialists, is: a current money shortage; a July-September dip in actual production; and at the year end, a pick-up to record levels of national output.

The report was delivered to Secretary of Commerce Weeks by 19 members of his Business Advisory Council, in session here. The 165-member council includes the heads of many of the country's largest corporations.

If there is any gain in total output in the July-September quarter, Weeks was told, it will be the result of price increases rather than actual growth in the volume of goods and services sold.

Slower Inventory Buying.

After the closed meeting with the advisory group, Weeks and the chairman of BAC's economic policy committee, T. V. Houser, gave reporters a briefing on the reports from key industries. Houser, who is board chairman of Sears, Roebuck & Co., said:

"There is a likelihood of some drop in the third quarter, due to a slower rate of inventory buying, but the expectation is that the fourth quarter will regain today's level in volume.

"If there is an increase in prices, the value of total production will be above the current high level."

Weeks said he gleans from the appraisals the impression there will be "a slackening in the third quarter, followed by a resumption in growth."

Concern Over Money.

Weeks and others left no doubt that the present "tight money" policy of the Federal Reserve Board, evidenced in last month's increase in the Federal Reserve's Bank lending rate, is giving business considerable concern. Some members privately have expressed fear that the contraction of credit, at a time when business wants to borrow heavily for expansion, may discourage growth investment.

Weeks acknowledged there is "a shortage of funds today." He said the Federal Reserve "must be flexible in the service that it provides—or is supposed to provide—to the economy." This oblique observation was taken to mean that Weeks favors some relaxation in reserve board policy, and he told reporters that the board chairman, William McC. Martin "has indicated the board will continue to serve the economy."

Weeks said the consensus of today's meeting was that a few soft spots exist in the economy but "business confidence in long-range growth is reflected in the continuing drive to modernize, expand and equip."

PROFESSOR IS TRANSFERRED

Air Force Capt. Jerold G. Mulkey, assistant professor of air science at Washington University since 1953, has been assigned to the Aircraft Observer School at Ellington Air Force Base, Tex. He was a combat infantryman in the Southwest Pacific campaign, and was commissioned in 1951.

Besides teaching air science, he supervised the Air Force R.O.T.C leadership laboratory program and was faculty adviser to the rifle and drill teams and drum and bugle corps. He was graduated from Willamette University, Salem, Ore., and formerly was assistant professor at Butler University.

CHINESE BOY JOINS TEACHER WHO SAVED HIM

Jack Ping, 10-year-old Chinese boy, arrived here yesterday with a bewildered smile and an armful of comic books to begin a new life with a St. Louis family.

The boy was met at Lambert-St. Louis Field by Mrs. Marjorie Philpot Zwalsh, school teacher, who saved him from drowning in 1953 in Bangkok, Siam, where she was studying on a fellowship.

Jack will live with Mrs. Zwalsh and her 11-year-old daughter, Diane, at their home, 7245A Stanley avenue, Maplewood. Eventually, Mrs. Zwalsh said, she may adopt him. He is the son of a Chinese Nationalist general on Formosa, who asked Mrs. Zwalsh if she would see that Jack got an American education.

The education itself apparently began somewhat ahead of schedule—on the plane, when someone gave Jack the comic books he was clutching as he descended the passenger ramp to meet his foster family.

GLENDALE TO VOTE TUESDAY ON BOND ISSUE FOR PARK

Voters in Glendale will go to the polls Tuesday to vote on a $200,000 bond issue for acquiring and equipping a city park. Included in the election will be a proposition to levy a tax of 10 cents on the $100 assessed valuation for maintenance of the park.

A nine-acre tract formerly occupied by the Oakland Park Hospital at 1027 East Essex avenue, Glendale, has been selected as a site for the park. Improvements planned, if the bond issue passes, include a swimming pool, tennis courts, a playground, comfort station and parking lot.

Polls will be open from 6 a.m. until sunset. They are located as follows: First Ward, City Hall; Second Ward, Stetcher's Market, and Third Ward, the Glendale Presbyterian Church. A two-third majority is required for approval of the bond issue.

World Arms Reduction

American and Russian Policies vs. Atomic Realities

Russia in Process of Adjusting to Nuclear Age, West Scarcely Begun—Cut in Soviet Forces Propaganda, Long-Run Strengthening Factor — Real Disarmament Still Seems to Be Remote.

By MARQUIS W. CHILDS
A Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.
(Copyright 1956, The Pulitzer Publishing Co.)

WASHINGTON, May 19.

THE wordy debate over the Soviet Union's reduction of its armed forces by 1,200,000 has largely overlooked one major difference between Moscow and the West. Russia is in process of adjusting to the realities of the nuclear age and in the West and particularly in Washington this adjustment has scarcely begun.

It is true, as Secretary of State John Foster Dulles has pointed out, that the release of these men from the Armed Services is only for propaganda purposes "disarmament." The net effect will in the long pull be to strengthen the Soviet Union, which is not to minimize for the short pull the propaganda benefits that Moscow is reaping from this shrewdly timed announcement.

American military planning and thinking is still dominated by concepts that pre-date the era of nuclear weapons. Retaliatory bombing, the massive deterrent, the Strategic Air Command—this is another layer superimposed on top of the traditional Army, Navy and Air. Although almost no one will mention it out loud, that has all along been one of the chief inhibiting factors in the American approach to disarmament.

AT THE COLONEL level staff studies are going forward looking to new concepts that would break through the old traditional forms. In the course of a meeting not long ago at which there was some sharp talk about the long delay in coming up with a new strategy one of the heretical younger officers present finally said:

"Do you know where we are today? We are exactly where we were after World War I when the cavalry was holding out for the horse in the face of the revolution that had been worked by the internal combustion engine."

That is an exaggeration but only a slight exaggeration. Now and then the curtain is momentarily lifted on the American dilemma. Gen. Nathan Twining, Chief of Staff of the Air Force, was asked before a Senate committee about the striking power in a nuclear war of the giant aircraft carriers on which billions of dollars are being spent. He replied that in his opinion it was "small." Many authorities outside the Navy long have said in private conversation that it was not small, but virtually non-existent.

Yet a vested interest, both in uniform and in industry, is back of the carriers. Not to mention, it must be added, a splendid tradition that weighs heavily in the balance. So long as this situation continues, with the separate services persisting in having each its share of the defense budget, it will be difficult or impossible to match the Soviet Union in "disarmament."

In the middle of the summit conference at Geneva the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Adm. Arthur W. Radford, and Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther, Supreme Commander of NATO, conferred with President Eisenhower. It was believed at the time that they urged on the President the proposal for mutual aerial reconnaissance with which he startled the conference 24 hours later. The Soviet Union has consistently refused to accept such inspection, countering with proposals for inspection of staging areas and bases by ground inspectors. Consequently there has been no real test of whether any substantial agreement on disarmament is possible, and so long as this obstacle stands in the way there is not likely to be one.

To say that the "open skies" proposal has been a welcome stop sign on the disarmament road, making it unnecessary to come to any final terms with Moscow, may sound cynical. But it has, in fact, served that purpose.

FOR MANY WEEKS before he left for the last session of the United Nations Subcommittee on Disarmament in London Harold E. Stassen, American representative on the committee and the President's specialist on peace, held almost continuous meetings with officials of the State and Defense departments. They were trying to work out an American position. Stassen complained shortly before his departure that the position had been so narrowed down it left him hardly room to stand.

Then for seven weeks in London the five members of the subcommittee—the United States, France, Soviet Russia, Canada and Great Britain—talked more thousands and thousands of words. This was their seventh session in two years.

What it added up to seemed to almost everyone concerned a large goose egg. But Stassen, conditioned by the difficulty of his task, has a remarkable facility for squeezing a little optimism from the most unlikely sources. He said that the picture was at least a few degrees brighter. This was based on his belief that progress had been made toward agreement between East and West on the areas of ground inspection.

The Soviet representative on the subcommittee, Andrei Gromyko, complained that the Anglo-French-American position had shifted. He charged that previously the three Western powers had agreed on a level of forces for the United States and Soviet Russia of 1,500,000. During the London talks this had been upped to 2,500,000.

The American reply was that the 1,500,000 level had been put forward merely as an illustrative figure on condition that the outstanding political differences between the Communist and non-Communist worlds should be settled first. The 2,500,000 figure would go into effect without settling any of these differences. The present level of American forces is 2,900,000.

Toward the end of the London disarmament talks Premier Nikolai Bulganin and Communist party boss Nikita Khrushchev came to London to visit Prime Minister Anthony Eden. The information relayed to Washington was that they both expressed themselves as unalterably opposed to the aerial inspection proposal. They were reported to have spoken about it with contempt. The impression conveyed to Washington was that anything approaching the kind of ironclad inspection system on which this country insists would be unacceptable to Moscow. To most officials here it seemed that the end of the road had been reached.

Nevertheless Stassen and his staff are continuing the exercise. The American position is being "restudied," intensively restudied. The five-nation subcommittee will report to the 12-nation Disarmament Commission at U.N. headquarters in New York. In the late fall the commission may propose still another go-round.

Under present circumstances this would seem to be largely futile. The members of the subcommittee would scarcely think it profitable to go over the same old ground again. They know the steps of the disarmament quadrille by heart and repeating them could not advance the cause of peace. All the talk of disarmament after World War I came to precisely the same kind of impasse. The Western powers then proceeded to let their armies lapse into the status of something like museum pieces. And even as Hitler forged a vast new military machine they remained unarmed.

IN WESTERN EUROPE today there is a strong tendency to cut the cost of armament and the number of men under arms. Eden has just announced in Parliament that British forces would be reduced by 72,000 to 700,000. According to authoritative reports, the Eden Government intends to eliminate conscription by 1960. The last draftees would be called to the colors in the fall of 1958 and after their two-year service is ended Britain would be defended by professional air, army and naval forces.

The reaction in Europe to the Soviet cut of 1,200,000 has on the whole been one of hope and even optimism. Dulles has been criticized in London for his gloomy view of the Russian move and particularly for saying that he would prefer to have more Russians in uniform doing guard duty, rather than have them working at making more atomic bombs.

At his press conference discussing the Soviet move Dulles said that at the meeting of NATO foreign ministers in Paris recently the anticipated reduction was brought up. He also said that a special group was being set up in the Government in Washington "to study the impli-

Could an American Policy Achieve Real Disarmament?

Following is a condensation of a statement by an economist, author of books both on Soviet Russia and Red China, and a leading member of the staff of the Center for International Studies at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Cambridge, Mass. The statement was presented to the Special Senate Subcommittee on Disarmament at recent hearings.

By W. W. ROSTOW

CAMBRIDGE, Mass.

I SHALL try to answer three questions: Is the Soviet government likely to accept a system of international control of armaments which we would regard as effective? If so, why? If so, when? I shall begin by trying to state what the Soviet government is now trying to accomplish in its military and foreign policy.

It is evident that the Soviet government is continuing to allocate a very large proportion of its resources in order to catch up and, if possible, to outstrip the United States in the weapons of mass destruction, the means of their delivery, and the means of defense against them. It is simultaneously proceeding with a vigorous reorganization of its ground forces and navy in the light of the tactical uses of atomic weapons. (Editor's note—This statement was written before Russia announced a cut in its armed forces by 1,200,000 men, but apparently that program is just such a reorganization of forces.)

IT IS EXTREMELY IMPORTANT, in the midst of the present soft policy emanating from Moscow and of hopeful talk about disarmament, to grasp the simple fact that Soviet outlays for armaments have sharply increased in the past year. The maximum objective is to achieve, if possible, so clean-cut a technological superiority over the United States that the Soviets could rationally envisage destruction of our deterrent power in a sudden blow, thus removing the United States from the arena of world power and permitting the Soviets to proceed to consolidate the world-wide hegemony that would then be theirs.

What is the minimum objective of Soviet military policy? It is to achieve a parity in the weapons of mass destruction, or a superiority not sufficient for a knock-out blow, and to use that parity or limited superiority as the basis for Soviet foreign policy.

Moscow is now pursuing a psychological, political and economic offensive designed to disengage the United States from power and influence in the vast continent of Eurasia, that is, the area lying between the offshore islands of Britain and Japan. This policy is now being pursued without overt use of Soviet force.

Its basic method is to associate Moscow with the aspirations of the peoples of the world for peace, dignified national status, and rapid economic growth; and to try to associate the United States and the West with the threat of war, with colonialism, and with economic stagnation.

It was no accident that an atomic bomb was exploded in the Soviet Union while Bulganin and Khrushchev were collecting garlands of flowers in India. A hard core of threat lies behind the soft foreign policy now emanating from Moscow.

Now what about the psychological, political, and economic policy of the Soviet Union? Here, too, I suspect, there are minimum and maximum objectives. The minimum objective is to prevent the United States from consolidating and maintaining in Eurasia a stable alliance with Western Europe and with the peoples of the underdeveloped regions who hold the future balance of the world's power in their hands.

At the maximum, Moscow hopes by progressive stages to attach the non-Communist nations of Eurasia to Moscow.

In Italy and France they now look to popular front tactics to accomplish this purpose. In Germany they look to the steady tempting of the West Germans with the prize of German unity, which Moscow alone is in a position to offer.

Apathy of Voters Mounts As the Election Nears -- Both Parties Concerned

Independents, Who Have Deciding Voice, Now Seem to Be Indifferent — Republicans Are Confident They Will Retain White House, Democrats They Will Keep Congress—'Middle of Road' Crowded.

By RAYMOND P. BRANDT
Chief Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, May 19.

SMALL turnouts for the presidential primaries and reports from traveling political correspondents make it clear that leaders of both parties have a job on their hands to arouse voter interest between now and the November elections.

Returns from Oregon's primary yesterday reflected the failure of the national party organizations to prod the indifferent voters to take as much interest in the presidential primaries as in the contests for state and local offices. A surprise of the voting was that President Eisenhower, unopposed for renomination, won a larger vote than the combined vote for Democrats Adlai E. Stevenson of Illinois and Senator Estes Kefauver of Tennessee, despite the larger registration of Democrats.

Both parties have reason to be vitally concerned over the apparent apathy of their own supporters and the seeming indifference of the important independents whose votes will decide whether there will be a Republican or Democratic President in the White House for the next four years and which party will control Congress.

Republican leaders know that Gen. Eisenhower was elected in 1952 by the independents and the nominal Republicans who had stayed away from the polls when Thomas E. Dewey was the party's nominee in 1944 and 1948.

Democratic leaders realize that while Stevenson got 26,547,000 votes in 1952, the nominee this year, whether or not Stevenson again, will be up against the same Eisenhower-Nixon ticket that got 32,991,000 votes.

REPUBLICANS are confident today that they will retain the White House; Democrats are almost equally confident they will continue to control the Capitol. Each wants to keep what it has and take what the other has.

The Republicans have the advantage with their popular President in a position to dominate the front-page headlines and explain his views on free television and radio time through press conferences and official speeches. The Eisenhower personality, record and his recommendations are their platform and they can campaign on it without interruption until Nov. 6.

With their 1956 slate and platform to be decided at the convention in August, the Democrats cannot concentrate on a single candidate or present clear-cut issues. The "loyal opposition" has had the ground cut from under it by the President's adoption of some of its proposals and by official action to answer some of its criticisms, such as the increased outlays for intercontinental bombers and the recommendation this week for creation of new offices in the Defense Department to co-ordinate research and development. Mr. Eisenhower's appointment of Democratic Senator Walter F. George of Georgia as his personal representative with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, besides paying a debt for past services, will help keep foreign policy from being a major issue in the campaign.

Two principal Democratic spokesmen, Stevenson and Senate Majority Leader Lyndon B. Johnson, have curbed the Democrats by their insistence on "moderation," which many interpret as an imitation of the Eisenhower "middle of the road" approach to the issues usually exploited in presidential and congressional campaigns. Senator Kefauver and Gov. Averell Harriman of New York, Stevenson's two most active rivals for the nomination, have denounced this tactic but neither has produced a specific Democratic or a personal platform which could be put beside the Eisenhower recommendations for comparison.

Harriman, who has tried to keep alive the fiction that he is not an "active" candidate for the nomination, came out in the open this week when he told a western audience he would welcome its support "not as a 'favorite son' (of New York) but as a candidate."

As a former New Deal and Fair Deal official of high rank, Harriman has been the most explicit of the Democratic aspirants in criticizing President Eisenhower and the Republican regime. He has said that "there is no such word as 'moderation' in the Democratic vocabulary," and has leveled his shots directly at the President, who, he says, is responsible for whatever goes on in the executive branch.

Harriman, however, labors under the same handicap of other political speakers this year. There is no clear voice in either party to arouse voter interest. Whether it is because they merely read the words prepared by their speech writers or whether people are too busy with other affairs to be concerned about national and local politics, the small crowds at political gatherings and the light votes in the primaries attest the fact that there is no present-day campaigner comparable to Presidents Franklin D. Roosevelt and Harry S. Truman, and no truly partisan speakers like the late Senators Robert A. Taft of Ohio and Alben W. Barkley of Kentucky.

Stevenson, Kefauver and Harriman are crossing the continent on handshaking campaigns interspersed with informal talks to relatively small groups. Their utterances, when reported in the newspapers, sound remarkably alike. Senators Stuart Symington of Missouri and Johnson of Texas are sticking to their Washington duties and Gov. Frank J. Lausche of Ohio is saying nothing about national issues. None is making the frank appeal to the lower income voters the way Roosevelt and Truman did.

Stevenson's Princetonian prose, although it makes sense to those who take time to study its rounded periods, does not inspire his listeners to repeat his phrases or rush out to persuade others to vote for Adlai. Kefauver's slow, flat voice is more impressive on television than in formal speeches, and Harriman, with his careful choice of words, is more at home in top level diplomatic conversations than in a fast moving press conference.

President Eisenhower, since his heart attack, has lost some of his television appeal. He looks better in the flesh than on the screen but he does not have the same fervor and air of sincere conviction that he displayed in the 1952 campaign. His speeches bear the unmistakable mark of the ghost writer and while his own "off the cuff" remarks make a better impression they are so general as to be almost meaningless for ascertaining their solid political content. For practical campaign purposes, Vice President Nixon has the best speaking technique for television and personal appearances. After careful preparation, he speaks from notes. His subjects, however, are limited to alleged subversives in Government and his unadulterated admiration for President Eisenhower.

The lack of lively, forcefully debated issues has been reflected in the recent primaries both in the inter-party and intra-party contests. With the exception of Oregon, where they are obligatory, write-in votes for presidential candidates have been negligible. In 10 states which have chosen candidates for the Senate and House not a single incumbent has been rejected by his party. Seven incumbent Senators and 135 House members have been renominated.

SENATORS and Representatives who have been "back home" say that their recent pay boost to $22,500 a year has not created any opposition and has aroused little comment. This increased salary, plus the permanent office staffs and the official perquisites, such as the free mail privilege, give the incumbent valuable advantages over possible rivals.

The exception to the incumbent rule is veteran Senator George of Georgia, who will not seek renomination in face of probable defeat by former Gov. Herman Talmadge.

Oregon's primary yesterday will have some psychological effect and the more important contests in Florida and California will tell how two states at the opposite sides of the country feel about the two most active Democratic candidates.

At best, primaries show only how the political wind is blowing in a particular state at a particular time regarding particular candidates who have chosen to campaign or are well known in those regions.

Plan to Raise the Level of U.S. Information Efforts

By GEORGE H. HALL
A Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, May 19.

THE United States Information Agency, much criticized at home and abroad, is relying on legislation now before Congress to raise its prestige to a level approximating that of the State Department's career foreign service.

This legislation, which has passed the Senate but which has not yet come before the House, would in effect create a professional corps of information specialists with salary schedules, tenure and official status considerably more impressive than at present.

The specialists work abroad under United States ambassadors and it is thought the proposed status for them would increase the efficiency of their operations by removing the disparity in rank that has often been a source of friction between embassy and information personnel.

"If the agency is to do its job well it must have able people," one of the sponsors of the legislation, Senator Alexander Smith (Rep.), New Jersey, told the Senate last week. "Recruitment of able employes is vastly facilitated if the agency can offer them career opportunities; that is, the chance to start work in an organization in which they will be paid and promoted according to merit, will be protected from arbitrary or partisan political action, and in which they may look forward to retirement with a reasonable income."

In this comment Smith indirectly took note of criticism that political backing sometimes is necessary to obtain or hold top jobs in the U.S.I.A. This has tended to lower the agency's stature as a professional organization and to reduce morale among employes. Some critics of the present legislation have expressed concern that political appointees or those the critics consider incompetent may be "frozen" in their present jobs if the bill becomes law.

Aside from the irresponsible charges made by Senator Joseph R. McCarthy (Rep.), Wisconsin, and his traveling agents Cohn and Schine, other criticisms of the U.S.I.A. have been that it tends to attract persons who have "lost out" in other jobs, and that it has been so kicked about and mistreated generally that first-rate men are not eager to become associated with it.

In view of the latter criticism, which is perhaps fundamental, it is somewhat extraordinary that there are so many able executives in the agency. There are in Washington and in stations overseas many capable and highly experienced men; there are also some incompetents.

Newspaper men are inclined to complain that too few of the top U.S.I.A. executives have a broad newspaper background; there is no proof, of course, that this is essential. The agency now is headed by Theodore C. Streibert, a former board chairman of the Mutual Broadcasting System and former assistant dean of the Harvard Business School. Streibert's deputy is Abbott Washburn, former manager of the Department of Public Services of General Mills, Inc.

The number three man in the agency is Andrew H. Berding, who is a graduate of Oxford University, a former head of the Associated Press Rome Bureau, former Defense Department Director of Information and former OSS Chief of Counterintelligence in Germany. Many regard Berding as the type of man the agency should attract.

In addition to the fact that it has been a sort of governmental orphan, the agency has at times been misunderstood because it has no effective means of telling its story to the American people. It is charged with the responsibility of disseminating information about the United States and its policies abroad, not at home. In addition, some of its most important activities abroad cannot be identified as connected with the U.S.I.A. because to do so would be to destroy their effectiveness.

The agency, which is seeking $135,000,000 for its operations next year, is independent but does not make policy. It publicizes official United States policies and attempts to interpret the American scene abroad.

Some of its recent major projects have been publicizing United States atoms-for-peace proposals, dramatizing President Eisenhower's proposal for an exchange of military blueprints with the Soviet Union and for mutual aerial inspection, exhibiting in many cities the Steichen photographic collection titled "The Family of Man," calling attention to United States exhibits at various international trade fairs and producing and distributing motion picture films, magazines, pamphlets and numerous specialized publications.

The agency is preparing to send on tour its "People's Capitalism" exhibit and still hopes to persuade Congress to give it $3,790,000 to transform an aircraft carrier into a "ship of ideas" to be sent around the world with showings of the extremely popular Cinerama and various exhibits of Americana.

The U.S.I.A. is covering extensively the current state visit to this country of President Sukarno of Indonesia. Its motion picture service is producing a two-reel color film of highlights of the visit and will furnish the Indonesian Government with enough footage for a six-reel documentary to be made a part of the Indonesian archives.

The Voice broadcasts in 41 languages over 78 transmitters and reaches remote corners of the globe, but its news programs never have had the acceptance of the reports of the British Broadcasting Corporation. There are reasons for this. BBC is a public corporation, not a direct arm of the British Government. It has built a reputation for objectivity which VOA, a federal agency, has been unable to match.

Also, BBC has access to the daily reports of the world's major commercial news-gathering agencies; VOA has been unable to obtain the services of the Associated Press and the United Press.

Passage of the U.S.I.A. legislation now before Congress would bring the agency somewhat closer to the status of the successful British Information Services, which are an integral part of the British Foreign Office. Many British foreign service officers include a stint in the information branch as part of their training.

British Empire information services are not confined to the BIS, incidentally. The Colonial Office has its own information service and the Commonwealth countries have their services. There is also the British Council, which endeavors to spread the English language and culture.

In supporting the pending legislation, Secretary of State John Foster Dulles said he thought it would enable information and foreign service officers "to work harmoniously side by side." Deputy Under Secretary of State for Administration Loy Henderson commented that there was "something of a limited chaos" in foreign service-information relations up until two or three years ago, but that more order gradually has taken place. He thought further benefits would be derived from the proposed changes.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE

Where to Learn to Read

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

One adult in 12 is a functional illiterate, says Reading Expert John J. DeBoer of the University of Chicago. He used census figures on adults 25 years and older who had less than a fifth grade education.

Thousands of men and women in the St. Louis area, many below age 25, cannot read. There are a multitude of reasons why individuals have not learned to read: poverty in early life, broken homes, personal troubles and handicaps, inaccessibility to schools, and overcrowding of classes.

In early 1954, the Adult Education Council of Greater St. Louis, a United Fund Agency, began to do something about teaching adults to read. Not only industrialism but democracy by its inherent nature requires this basic skill.

A small group of eight non-readers were tutored by a teacher with special training. Since the pilot class, 697 men and women have responded successfully to seven teachers in centers located at Hanley Junior High School in University City and Hadley Technical High School in St. Louis. In the summer the program has been conducted at People's Art Center.

The teachers have found the experience stimulating and rewarding; the students and their families are proud of the progress made.

Evening classes will begin June 6 at 7:30 p.m. at 3657 Grandel square, the People's Art Center, and continue on Tuesdays for eight weeks.

Requests for information should be directed to the sponsoring agency, The Adult Education Council, 721 Olive, CH 1-2632. The Council extends an open invitation to any adult in this area who cannot read —and that includes the county, city, or Illinois.

SUSAN SIMRALL,
Executive Director, Adult Education Council of Greater St. Louis.

As to W. P. Elmer

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

I noted the report on the death of Hon. W. P. Elmer and the statement that he had been Speaker of the House in the Fifty-fifth General Assembly.

If you will turn to the 1955-56 Missouri Blue Book on page 190 and 191 you will see that the late Jones H. Parker was speaker at that session. To my knowledge Mr. Elmer never served as elected speaker.

I had the honor of serving with Mr. Elmer in the Fifty-sixth General Assembly and he was respected by all who served with him.

State Representative from New Madrid County.

Bread Without Poundage

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

We have an overpowering wheat surplus. Wheat is rotting in the holds of ships and in makeshift outdoor storage tanks.

At the same time, bread companies are lamenting the fact that the American people eat less bread per capita. And why do people eat less bread? Because they are watching their weight.

Nutritionally, the situation doesn't make sense. People should eat more bread, but it should be the whole grain type. Then there would be maximum nutrition for every calorie.

If the bread companies would only use a new approach and concentrate their advertising guns on the necessity for some whole grains each day, it is my belief that the great majority of the American people would reverse the trend to eating less bread.

If each person in the country ate one extra slice of bread a day, we would not have a wheat surplus. The nutrition of the country would take a good step forward, the farmers would be happier, and the bread manufacturers would make more money especially since they get premium prices for whole wheat.

When it comes to the basic facts of science and nutrition, we take expensive steps to short change ourselves. How long can we afford to be so unintelligent?

Dealing and Wheeling

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

If Bobby Del Greco, the new Cardinal outfielder, can do everything better than Bill Virdon, why wasn't Del Greco "Rookie of the Year" last year? Virdon won that honor.

The answer is that Del Greco couldn't break into the lineup of a last-place Pittsburgh club because he was in the minor leagues, that's why. As to Littlefield, well even our lamented Browns couldn't use him. Trader Lane is transforming a promising young ball club into an old folks' home. CLAYTON FAN.

These deals are not trades. They are the biggest giveaways since Teapot Dome and offshore oil. It took Bill Veeck almost three years to give away the Browns, but the horse trader is 'way ahead of that schedule. Next thing you know we'll hear that Stan the Man, Moon and Boyer have been traded for Jackie Robinson and a second-hand catcher's mitt.

Mexico, Mo. W.L.D.

Now that the Cardinals have traded the young team they have worked so hard to build, let's trade Frank Lane for a new general manager. FAN.

Partisanship Set Aside

Walter S. Robertson is one of the most responsible officials in the Eisenhower Administration. As Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs he shoulders the responsibility for United States policy with respect to the perplexing problems of the Orient. His specific assignments have taken him to the Geneva Conference of 1954 and to the Manila Pact Conference at Bangkok last year.

Because Assistant Secretary Robertson is this trusted official of the Eisenhower Administration special importance attaches to an address he delivered at Staunton, Va., the birthplace of Woodrow Wilson. The occasion was a notable gathering, including ambassadors or their representatives from 35 countries, in connection with the centennial year of the birth of the World War I President.

Mr. Robertson's review of the Wilson career was in striking contrast to the slurs frequently thrown at that great President by Republican partisan speakers. There was no low blow at Woodrow Wilson as the first of "three Democratic Presidents to get the country into war." There was no attempt to dismiss him as a visionary, an impractical idealist, an egghead.

On the contrary, Mr. Robertson made a point of saying that when war came in Europe in 1914, "Wilson was primarily concerned to keep our nation out of it." He told how Wilson as a boy of 8 "had seen at firsthand in Georgia the horror that follows in the wake of war."

Because Wilson's "devotion to peace was genuine and compelling," the Democratic President struggled through three years of the war in Europe to find a common ground on which the belligerents could meet. Of this Mr. Robertson said:

> Wilson's statesmanship stands out as mature and inspired. He could not have tried harder than he did to bring about "peace without victory," but no man could have held back the tide of events that was to follow—the sacrifice of more hundreds and thousands of lives, the achievement of power by the Communists in Russia, the internal collapse of Germany and the eventual rise of Nazism, bringing on Europe another and near fatal war.

The Assistant Secretary of State not only commended Wilson's 14 points as a "historic peace program" with "overpowering psychological effect" that shortened the war. He commended also Wilson's vision in proposing the League of Nations and in insisting that it be part of the World War I peace treaty. Then Mr. Robertson made this remarkable statement:

> President Wilson's defeat came not in Paris but at home. It is not my purpose to explore the causes of that rejection. No one can question the earnest patriotism of the opposition. No one can question that the blame must be shared.
> It is enough for us to recall that on Aug. 8, 1945, the United States Senate voted in favor of American membership in the League's successor, the United Nations, vindicating Woodrow Wilson's ideals by the startling vote of 89 to 2.
> We had by then paid in copious measure for our failure to join the League of Nations that Woodrow Wilson had founded.

What relevance does the Wilson example have for us today? Mr. Robertson made it very clear when he recalled how Wilson's idealism was "derided" in the 1920s and then said: "We have had to learn once more that when Wilson said 'the world must be made safe for democracy' he was expressing the necessary and transcendent objective of our nation's foreign policy, the end we still must achieve if we mean to survive."

At the start of 1956 the hope was expressed on this page that the centennials of those two great men of ideas, Woodrow Wilson and his Supreme Court appointee, Louis Dembitz Brandeis, would somehow raise the level of campaigning in the presidential election year.

Certainly Assistant Secretary of State Walter S. Robertson has done his part to set partisanship aside and to give credit where due. His address at the historic and lovely town of Staunton, Va., ought to be required reading for Republican and Democratic speakers in the months ahead. It has the stamp of statesmanship.

Farm Bill, Second Round

All the fire had gone out of the farm bill fight by the time the Senate buckled down to the dull work of passing a second bill which the President would sign. Everybody's record had been made. The Democrats had taken their stand for 90 per cent of parity price supports. The cotton Senators and Congressmen had done their bit for cotton, wheat had been taken care of, also corn, also feed grains, rice and peanuts. The Administration had made its play for prepayment of soil bank benefits before the November election, and been rebuffed.

So there was a certain sense of anti-climax when the Senate at length passed a bill which the Administration indicates it will accept. The time has come for the House to go along. Then the soil bank can be put into effect for next year, and the voters at the polls next fall can give their own answer to the question of which side best represented the true interests of American agriculture.

Where the Theater Travels

While the theatric arts boom on Broadway, on the road they are experiencing trouble with the high cost of transportation. That factor, added to the rising cost of theatrical production generally, is proving crucial. The Chicago Tribune, in an interesting survey of the problem, concludes that "the effect on the nation's drama audience, depending on Broadway origination, is depressing."

In lusher road-days, "Victoria Regina" visited 40 cities in one season, "The Barretts of Wimpole Street" more than 50, "The Green Pastures" 90 in the United States and Canada. Now, reports the Tribune, the average is 20, the reduction largely due to the high cost and difficulty of travel.

Many touring companies are forsaking the railroads for the highways. "Ballet Theater" traveled in three baggage cars and three sleepers for many years; now it travels in one huge bus. "The Bad Seed" is an exception to the busward trend: before it reached Chicago this year it had traveled 6300 miles over 12 major railroads to 20 cities in 15 states.

The chief sufferers from the restricted road tour are such places as college towns—which are precisely those where cultural experience should be the richest and most varied. Even favored cities feel the pinch; an excellent drama may never take to the road, because of high transportation costs: another with a narrow profit margin may bow out if its box office slumps once, as the excellent musical "Paint Your Wagon" did at Chicago several years ago.

For all this, our cultural life as a nation is the poorer. What is the answer? Should the transportation of worthwhile theater be partly underwritten by public subsidy? Can the transportation industry itself better adapt to the needs of the traveling theater? Can the theater industry happily be more decentralized so that, instead of depending almost entirely on New York City, it will originate more productions on the West Coast and at least some in our own Midlands, at Chicago or St. Louis perhaps? A broader and deeper experience with the theater in what New York is pleased to call the hinterlands would be well worth the effort of thinking out the way to it.

As Mr. Stassen Sees It

Presidential Assistant Harold Stassen evidently believes that the announced Soviet cut in military manpower has a direct connection with the London disarmament talks. The Russians first revealed their intentions during those talks, he says. And the President is going to appoint a board of eight to review both the disarmament negotiations and the implications of the Moscow statement that its armed forces will be reduced within the next year by 1,200,000 men.

There are plenty of agencies within the Government already set up to evaluate such developments, the highest being the National Security Council. Yet it should be useful to get the opinions also of qualified military, nuclear and economic experts outside the constituted agencies. Mr. Stassen is right in saying that our reaction should be one of neither gullibility nor cynicism.

Mr. Stassen seems to give the Russians a little more credit than Secretary Dulles was inclined to do. While he thinks many factors entered into the decision, he does not interpret it merely as a shifting of men from sentry duty to the manufacture of atomic bombs. Rather he believes it indicates a wish by the Russians to continue negotiations for a comprehensive disarmament agreement.

We hope the President's special assistant for disarmament is right. For this would indicate that further progress toward a workable and safe disarmament pact is possible. It would suggest that the Russians are ready to offer "deeds, not words" as their contribution to that progress. Next, as Mr. Stassen says, they ought to make it possible for the Western nations to verify whether they are actually carrying out the manpower cuts they have proclaimed.

"Deeds, not words" is a two-way street, however, and it would be well for the West, which reduced its own military manpower before the Russians did, to respond with some new deeds of its own.

One thing Mr. Stassen's board could consider is the possibility of modifying the American position that aerial inspection should be in operation before a disarmament pact is signed. So long as the "open skies" plan is a precondition of a disarmament treaty it can be regarded as a measure of military reconnaissance rather than disarmament, and the Russians have indicated that they view it in this light.

Certainly "open skies" would have to be a part of the necessary inspection system. But that system could be set up by stages, and the stages could be agreed on in advance in the disarmament treaty itself.

Valedictory in Oil

The senior class of Riverview Gardens High School has brought and presented to the school paintings by Fred James Carpenter and Vivian Miller Powell of St. Louis, and remembering some of the litter that senior classes sometimes leave behind them, we think this is worth a critical notice, plus a full set of diplomas.

Undoubtedly the favorite senior class present is (or was, in our day) a plaque. Next to that came the drinking fountain. Occasionally the class bought a book, usually a big dictionary. Sometimes the gift was a stone chaise longue, often parked in the lobby. Then, too, there was the picture of Washington crossing the Delaware, or Rosa Bonheur's white horses.

To enumerate briefly the things that seem wrong about such gifts, plaques go unread, drinking fountains are used in an uncommemorative manner, schools normally have big dictionaries, stone seats are even less comfortable than school desks, and maybe we all have been watching Washington crossing the Delaware too long. He did get across, after all.

Thus we think the Riverview Gardens senior class is performing a sensible service in supplying modern paintings which will be looked at, which will be commemorative and which are unusual for almost any high school. It goes to show what a high school education can do.

Oregon Arranges a Battle

Oregon voters did two things of national interest in their primaries Friday. The Republicans made certain that this year's senatorial contest will be fought on the issues of conservation and public power. The Democrats gave Adlai E. Stevenson a boost in his quest for a second presidential nomination.

Four years ago Senator Kefauver won Oregon's Democratic delegates as the only candidate on the ballot, Gov. Stevenson having discouraged voters from writing in his name. This year both stayed out of the formal lists, but after their contests in other states began to heat up, both put on spirited write-in campaigns. Gov. Stevenson won handily. He has not, in fact, lost a primary since Senator Kefauver upset him in Minnesota. But the big tests are still ahead—Florida on May 29 and California in early June.

The Republican contest for Senator was of equal if not greater significance. Douglas McKay, who resigned as Secretary of the Interior to make the race, had all the prestige of a White House indorsement, the backing of the national G.O.P. leadership, and plenty of funds. He won, but his leading opponent got four votes for every five that went to Mr. McKay—a remarkable showing.

Whether this defection represents dissatisfaction with Eisenhower Administration policies on conservation and public power, or simply local political factors, can only be guessed at. That question will be answered in the November election, when Mr. McKay meets Senator Wayne Morse head-on. No Democratic candidate better symbolizes the opposition to the Eisenhower Administration record on conservation and power; and none can expect a more strenuous G.O.P. effort to unseat him than this maverick who deserted the Republican party in revolt against Dwight Eisenhower.

From Jet's Speed to Snail's Pace

A House subcommittee's approval of $551,000 for a start on St. Louis's flood control project moves this necessary enterprise a little further on a tedious way through Congress. The subcommittee's report is to be presented Monday to the full House Appropriations Committee, which has yet to act, as has a subcommittee in the Senate.

Members of Congress proceeding at this snail's pace might be reminded of the jet speed with which they earlier authorized the project. Their ready response was taken as evidence that they were well persuaded of the need. Why should that persuasion be any the less for the appropriation to put it into practice than for the authorization that put it in prospect?

About Secrets and Falling Tiles

By Carroll Binder

The late Carroll Binder, editor of the editorial page of the Minneapolis Tribune and formerly head of the Chicago Daily News foreign service, was a distinguished newspaper man. In addition to many journalistic assignments, he served as the American representative on the United Nations commission to draft a convention on freedom of information. This statement of his credo is reprinted from This I Believe, edited by Edward R. Murrow (Simon and Schuster, 1952).

"We are all at the mercy of a falling tile," Julius Caesar reminds us in Thornton Wilder's "Ides of March." None of us knows at what hour something we love may suffer some terrible blow by a force we can neither anticipate nor control.

Fifty-five years of living, much of the time in trouble centers of a highly troubled era, have not taught me how to avoid being hit by falling tiles. I have sustained some very severe blows. My mother died when I was 3 years old. My first-born son, a gifted and idealistic youth, was killed in the war. While I was still cherishing the hope that he might be alive, circumstances beyond my control made it impossible for me to continue work into which I had poured my heart's blood for 20 years.

Carroll Binder

I speak of such things here in the hope of helping others to believe with me that there are resources within one's grasp which enable one to sustain such blows without being crushed or embittered by them.

I believe the best hope of standing up to falling tiles is through developing a sustaining philosophy and state of mind all through life. I have seen all sorts of people sustain all sorts of blows in all sorts of circumstances by all sorts of faiths, so I believe anyone can find a faith that will serve his needs if he persists in the quest.

One of the best ways I know of fortifying oneself to withstand the vicissitudes of this insecure and unpredictable era is to school oneself to require relatively little in the way of material possessions, physical satisfactions or the praise of others. The less one requires of such things the better situated one is to stand up to changes of fortune.

I am singularly rich in friendships. Friends of all ages have contributed enormously to my happiness and helped me greatly in times of need. I learned one of the great secrets of friendship early in life—to regard each person with whom one associates as an end in himself, not a means to one's ends. That entails trying to help those with whom one comes in contact to find fulfillment in their own way while seeking one's own fulfillment in one's own way.

Another ethical principle that has stood me in good stead is: Know thyself! I try to acquaint myself realistically with my possibilities and limitations. I try to suit my aspirations to goals within my probable capacity to attain. I may have missed some undiscovered possibilities for growth but I have spared myself much by not shooting for stars it clearly was not given me to attain.

I have seen much inhumanity, cheating, corruption, sordidness and selfishness but I have not become cynical. I have seen too much that is decent, kind and noble in men to lose faith in the possibility of a far finer existence than yet has been achieved. I believe the quest for a better life is the most satisfying pursuit of men and nations.

I love life but I am not worried about death. I do not feel that I have lost my son and a host of others dear to me by death. I believe with William Penn that "they that love beyond the world cannot be separated by it. Death is but crossing the world, as friends do the seas; they live in one another still." Death, I believe, teaches us the things of deathlessness.

A Well-Spent Nickel for Liberty

L. M. White in The Mexico Ledger

The employment of competent reporters with integrity, combined with fearless newspapers, is one method of keeping the rascals out of office or getting them out when in. Missouri is fortunate in having on the people's side the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, one of the great newspapers in this country. You may not always agree with its editorial opinion but you do know that it is not controlled, and that it is always honest in its expressions of opinion.

But such a newspaper cannot do its best public service unless it has on its staff reporters who are both fearless and of such a high integrity and competence that they cannot be "reached" or fooled. Curtis A. Betts, who for years covered the political news of the state and the capital for the Post-Dispatch and retired several years ago, was such a reporter. He was nationally recognized in his field.

Boyd Carroll, who succeeded Mr. Betts in this important role, carries on this fine tradition which means so much to the public. In a recent address in Columbia when he was given an Award of Merit by the Missouri University School of Journalism, Mr. Carroll commented on several of the political facts of life. We feel these are important enough to repeat for the benefit of those who have the ballot—whether they use it or not:

The level of citizenship will be lifted, he said, when someone devises an appeal that will close the gap between votes cast in an election and those eligible.

"Some legislator might get it done with a law depriving individuals of the privilege of voting for a penalty period for not voting within a designated number of elections," he said. "It would be explosive—and probably would retire the legislator."

Mr. Carroll said there are not so many lobbyist-financed wild parties, and not so many delegations now in evidence, although lobbyists are just as busy and perhaps more effective in the legislature.

Mr. Carroll said that from $100,000 to $150,000 is spent by a candidate for Governor in Missouri and some $80,000,000 by major parties during presidential and congressional races. "Political campaigns are big business. I doubt that many political contributions are donated to political war chests in the same spirit that governs tithing for church collection plates," he continued. "The collection methods, objectives and anticipated rewards are not religious in any political sense."

"I believe the best medium to keep the people informed is the newspaper, supplemented by radio and television," he continued. "Certainly not by political committee chairmen and spokesmen."

You may pay five cents for a daily newspaper but it is the best nickel and the most important you ever invested in many instances for public service and protection of your liberties.

WHY THE WEEPING?

From the Irish Digest, Dublin.

A singer had just finished "My Old Kentucky Home." The hostess, seeing one of her guests weeping in a corner, inquired in a sympathetic voice: "Are you a Kentuckian?" The answer came quickly: "No, madam—I am a musician."

Ozark Country

George C. Stuart's poetry makes a second appearance in this column with "Ozark Country," printed here for the first time. His poem, "A Visit to Vachel Lindsay's Grave," was published in the Post-Dispatch on Feb. 12. He is minister of the First Christian Church in Bloomington, Ill.

I

Cry the hunter's heart among these hills,
Searching the river's bend,
Loosing upon this land the wind
And the wind's passion. The hound voice fills
The cabined huntsmen with its song,
Shelters with foxes out of sight,
Overtakes the running shadows of the night:
And the slow dark is captured like a bleeding bird
And held against the morning light.

II

Slow paced to strangers' eyes
The women walk, turning with surprise,
Leaning on their evening talk,
Finding in their galt the roll of river road.

Only the children do not play.
They wait for waterfall, Indian dance,
And the long scream of plunging lover.
Their eyes believe. It is a trance
Of certainty. They do not play.

The men's eyes
Follow the wind and the river road;
And when the women pass,
The game they left unplayed
Is rediscovered.

III

Lately he had a passion for distance,
A slow beating of the heart against the sky,
A ridge rimmed burning in the mind:
There were oceans in his eyes and the high stars.

Once he saw the landlocked images of Spain,
And the dream was more real to him
Than his mother's words and his wife's remorse and his children's smiles;
And every evening he walked to the river road
And came back home again.

GEORGE C. STUART.

Dayton Hill

From the New York Herald Tribune

Ten years ago today I stood
Here, where the hill path leaves the wood.
I came to bid a last good-bye
To all the lovely lands that lie
Under this special arch of sky,
And fix the image in my brain
So clear that I could see again
At will, the view on Dayton.

I never saw a wood so grand
As this that shields my father's land,
Or fields that slope so fresh and green
With fence and cherry trees between
Down to a brook so crystal clean,
Or barns so trim, or lofts so warm,
As these that from my father's farm
Look up at me on Dayton.

Now they are yours. Your son will know
Thoughts that were my thoughts long ago.
Upon his brain the land will press
The print of its own loveliness
Too deep for him to bear, unless
He learns, much earlier than I,
To plant his heel and say good-bye
To all he loved on Dayton.

U.S. Supreme Court Is Target Of Most Bitter Attack Since Roosevelt Tried to 'Pack' It 70 Bills Aimed at Curbing Its Power Have Been Offered in Congress, but There Is Little Possibility of Passage at This Session.

By EDWARD F. WOODS
A Washington Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, May 19.

NOT SINCE 1937, when Congress rejected President Franklin D. Roosevelt's plan to "pack" the Supreme Court, has the high tribunal been the subject of such bitter controversy as it is today. In the Senate, especially, there have been within the last two weeks eloquent displays of congressional concern over court decisions which, it is claimed, have taken the court completely out of bounds and into the area of states' rights.

More than 70 bills aimed at curbing the Supreme Court in one fashion or another have been introduced in either the House or the Senate. Collectively, they are the symbol of mounting anger dating back to two years ago this week when the court struck down racial segregation in public schools.

In another sense, they recall the legislative clamor for "something to be done about the Supreme Court" which came in the wake of the decision in the Dred Scott case which, basically, ruled that Congress had no power to restrict slavery in the states.

Inherent in the welter of proposed measures currently being routed to the Judiciary Committees of the House and Senate is the intent to limit or take away from the high court the power to invalidate acts of Congress which are not specifically in violation of the Constitution.

Little Chance of Action.

The possibility of congressional curbs on the court going through at this session, at least, are remote. This week, Chairman Emanuel Celler of the House Judiciary Committee, a New York Democrat with liberal leanings, announced flatly that his committee would clear none of the proposed measures.

Originators of much of the proposed legislation are Southerners, some of them seeking to make a flamboyant record on the race question, such as Senator James O. Eastland (Dem.), Mississippi.

But there are Northerners involved in the undertaking, such as Senator Joseph R. McCarthy (Rep.), Wisconsin, and Senator Andrew Schoeppel (Rep.), Kansas. McCarthy is angry because the Supreme Court ruled that state anti-sedition laws have no standing since federal law is supreme in that field. Schoeppel is boiling mad because the court ruled that Congress intended that the Federal Power Commission should regulate the price of natural gas at the wellhead.

One of the leaders in the anti-court movement is Senator Harry F. Byrd (Dem.), Virginia, author of a bill aimed at what he terms the "pre-emption doctrine" of the Supreme Court. In speeches in the Senate and in statements before the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee, Byrd, Eastland and McCarthy have espoused legislative action to do away with the "pre-emption doctrine."

Byrd's Definition.

As Byrd defines the "pre-emption doctrine" of the court, it assumes that when Congress enacts legislation on a subject the court may presume that Congress intends to take exclusive jurisdiction in that field and that state laws on the subject are null and void.

This is what occurred in the court's decision with respect to Pennsylvania's anti-sedition law, which extends to all such statutes enacted by the states.

What Byrd would do in his proposed legislation would inform the court that when Congress intends a federal law to invalidate all state laws applying to a specific area it will say so, and in the absence of such stated intent the court is not empowered to presume otherwise.

In Byrd's view, the "pre-emption doctrine" must be outlawed if the "form of government as we know it is to survive."

The opinion in the Pennsylvania case was written by Chief Justice Earl Warren, also the author of the anti-segregation opinion of two years ago. He wrote that while Congress had not stated specifically in its enactments dealing with sedition that it was taking over that area to the exclusion of state laws, there must be an inescapable conclusion that Congress so intended.

Segregation Decisions.

Other court decisions which are at the root of the legislative revolt against the court go back, of course, to May 17, 1954, when the tribunal ruled that school segregation was unconstitutional. There has been since then a mushrooming of federal district and appeals court decisions applying to transportation, playgrounds, golf courses, swimming pools and even amusement parks where local and state statutes have fallen before the court's decision that there is no such thing as a separate but equal facility.

In the Judiciary Committees of both houses of Congress are bills which would remove from the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court any suit that questioned the validity of a state constitutional provision or law relating to the establishment, maintenance or operation of public schools.

Eastland has proposed a measure which would reserve exclusive jurisdiction to the states in matters relating to the regulation of health, marriage, morals, education and "good order in the state."

Senator Russell B. Long (Dem.), Louisiana, has proposed a constitutional amendment limiting the service of anyone on the Supreme Court to 12 years, an obvious attempt to change the bench's present personnel. Justices now are appointed for life and can be removed only after impeachment. There are other bills which would compel retirement of the justices at the age of 75. Retirement now is permissive at 70 but a justice may elect to remain until he dies.

Judicial Experience.

There are many proposals requiring judicial experience on the federal bench before appointment to the Supreme Court. At present there is no constitutional or statutory requirement that an appointee to the Supreme Court need even be a lawyer.

Senator George Smathers (Dem.), Florida, has introduced a bill which would require at least five years' judicial experience as a prerequisite to ascending the Supreme Court bench. There is no question among observers here that the Smathers bill is not prompted by the position of the court in recent years on civil and states' rights.

Whatever the merits of the Smathers proposal, a look at the record indicates that of the 90 justices who have sat on the Supreme Court, 45 would not have qualified under the Smathers bill.

And only four of the 14 chief justices would have qualified. They would have been John Rutledge, Oliver Ellsworth, William Howard Taft and Fred M. Vinson.

Of the present members of the court, those with prior judicial experience are Justices Sherman Minton, Hugo L. Black and John M. Harlan. Of these three only Minton has had as much as five years' experience on the bench.

Exasperation with the court, however, on the ground of lack of prior judicial experience is provoked among different persons for different reasons.

In Roosevelt Period.

The conservative Supreme Court in the period 1932-1936 which caused Franklin D. Roosevelt so much anxiety and led him down the road to the "court-packing" move had only two members with previous bench experience. Justice Benjamin Cardozo presided in New York courts for 18 years and Justice Willis Van Devanter had served as chief justice of the Supreme Court of Wyoming and was a federal judge for seven years.

In recent months there have been — by Governors, Legislatures and State Attorneys General — pronouncements against the court in the form of resolutions calling for "interposition" of the rights of the states between those of the Federal Government and the court. There was a manifesto signed by a majority of Southern Senators and Representatives attacking the tribunal's position on the segregation issue. The latter urged every lawful means at hand be taken to prevent enforcement of the new doctrine.

Byrnes Demands Curb.

This week, out of South Carolina, came the voice of James F. Byrnes, adding to the din against the court. In an article published in U.S. News and World Report, Byrnes said that the Supreme Court had to be curbed.

What made his views newsworthy was that Byrnes is a former associate justice of the court.

He hinged his attack on the court on the decisions dealing with the races. He asserted that the people of the United States are not the creatures of the Supreme Court, but that the court is the creature of the people.

Byrnes hit at the court not only on the segregation question, but on the Pennsylvania sedition law case and added, for good measure, a court decision which said that the City of New York could not legally fire a school teacher who had invoked the constitutional privilege against being required to testify against himself.

The present indications are unmistakable. The court is in trouble with the legislative arm.

The fact remains, however, as the legislative arm may eventually be reminded by the court, that the law of the land is what the United States Supreme Court says it is.

MARTIN THINKS EISENHOWER WILL WIN 4 STATES IN SOUTH

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 19 (UP)—House Republican leader Joseph W. Martin Jr. predicts President Eisenhower will capture four southern states in the November election.

The Massachusetts representative told a Republican dinner last night Mr. Eisenhower would win in Texas, Florida and Tennessee and Virginia.

Martin said the defeat of Gov. Allan Shivers by Senator Lyndon B. Johnson for control of the Texas delegation to the Democratic national convention would have no effect on the presidential election. Shivers supported Mr. Eisenhower in 1952.

Mexico to Raise Postal Rates.

MEXICO CITY, May 19 (AP) —Postal rates go up next month to help reduce the system's deficit. Postage for ordinary first-class letters will rise from 20 centavos to 30, equal to 2.4 United States cents. Airmail goes up from 30 to 50 centavos, equal to 4 cents.

WHO'S WHO IN THE NEWS

'Ol Gene's Boy' Herman Appears Headed for Senate; He's Come a Long Way From Days of Red Galluses

Discards Dad's Old Tricks — George's Withdrawal Gives Him Clear Field.

Talmadge Is Expert on Government and Farming — Many Serious Interests.

By SAM B. ARMSTRONG
National Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

ATLANTA, Ga., May 19.

THERE are quite a few people in Georgia who don't want to see Herman Talmadge go to the United States Senate, but since they haven't been able to find a man to oppose him for the Democratic nomination it appears likely that "Ol' Gene's boy" will succeed where his father failed twice.

The anti-Talmadge groups were left without a candidate when bankers and big business men who had supported Senator Walter F. George for many years decided he couldn't win and persuaded him to avoid embarrassment by announcing his retirement instead of becoming a candidate for a seventh term.

Talmadge, indeed, had a long lead on Senator George whose duties as chairman of the important Foreign Relations Committee kept him close to Washington, permitting him to spend little time in Georgia. And it would be an even longer advantage over a candidate with less political stature or reputation than George, who is to become President Eisenhower's personal representative to NATO.

In fact, Talmadge, although he did not formally announce his candidacy until Senator George let his plans be known, had been campaigning for the Senate seat since he left the governorship in January 1955, making scores of speeches championing "white supremacy" and inveighing against elimination of segregation in schools.

Supporters of the 42-year-old former Governor made much of Senator George's age. He is 78.

Opponents Swing Over.

Three political figures who previously had actively opposed Talmadge announced last week that they were supporting him in the Sept. 12 primary. They were former State Representative John Greer of Lakeland, who had been in Senator George's camp; State Representative Downing Musgrove of Clinch, and State Representative William Dean of Conyers.

Greer, in 1950, managed the campaign of M. E. Thompson who was defeated for governor by Talmadge in the primary. Musgrove was manager of Thompson's unsuccessful gubernatorial campaign in 1954. Thompson has been mentioned as a possible candidate to oppose Talmadge this year but does not appear to be interested.

Friends of Ellis Arnall, who defeated Eugene Talmadge for the governorship in 1942, do not expect him to leave a successful law practice to enter the Senate race. Former Commissioner of Agriculture Tom Linder also has been under consideration by the anti-Talmadge forces, but some of Linder's former supporters have announced for Talmadge.

Championship of "white supremacy" has been the political stock in trade of both Talmadges, also known for their opposition to foreign aid. Four times it carried the late Eugene Talmadge to the governorship and it worked for Herman Talmadge in 1950 when he was only 37.

Comparing Father and Son.

Each colorful and controversial, the Talmadges, father and son, never-the-less offer some strong contrasts.

Talmadge tradition has it that when Thomas Talmadge sailed from England in the good ship Plough in 1631 to found the American family, he carried with him a parchment on which his coat-of-arms was etched, including the motto, "Frangas non Flectes," which, liberally translated, comes out: "You may bend me but not break me."

Cantankerous, chip-on-the-shoulder "Ol' Gene," the idol of the wool hat boys back in the hills, defied even the family motto. No one tried to "bend" Ol' Gene. He was the one who did the bending. The only thing that suggested elasticity about him was his red galluses which he loved to snap as he harrangued an audience: "This is white men's country."

A Phi Beta Kappa at the University of Georgia, he was a born actor and he delighted in adjusting his dress and his language to the crowd. He murdered the King's English with malice aforethought, in a backwoods schoolhouse, pausing occasionally to shift the bulging quid of tobacco in his mouth.

Such audiences which liked to hear Scripture and snatches of verse, were most important under the Georgia county unit law. A vote from one of these folks was worth a dozen in Atlanta because each county has a certain number of "unit" votes, based unequally on population, and they determine the winner. Although James V. Carmichael won the popular vote for Democratic nomination for governor in 1946, Ol' Gene came out on top because he won the "unit" vote.

Eugene Talmadge preached and practiced economy saying that the way to keep Government honest was to keep it poor. He used the meat ax on appropriation bills, opposed federal road legislation and pinched pennies at every turn.

Cow on the Front Lawn.

When he moved into the executive mansion for his first term in 1933 he shocked his neighbors on the Prado, Atlanta's fashionable thoroughfare. Calling carpenters, he ordered them to build a barn, a chicken house and a dog house and sent to his plantation for horses, a cow and a hound. He brought in pheasants and chickens for the back yard and peacocks to strut across the greensward in front of the mansion where the cow was wont to graze. The wool hat boys roared and cheered. Here was economy in Government, eh?

When a textile strike developed in 1934, the Governor called out the National Guard to "protect the right to work" and imprisoned strike leaders in barbed wire stockades.

A bitter critic of the "New Deal," Eugene Talmadge often was at odds with the late Harold Ickes, then Secretary of the Interior, who called the Georgian "His Chain-Gang Excellency."

Unable under the law to succeed himself as governor, Talmadge waged a heated campaign against Richard B. Russell for the Democratic nomination for United States Senator in 1936 and lost. Two years later, he tried his hand against Senator George and again was the loser.

Herman Able to 'Bend.'

Herman Talmadge, who learned Georgia politics from his father by managing two of his campaigns, has not shown—except on "white supremacy" and segregation — the intransigeance that characterized his father. It would appear, that, like his more remote forebears, he may be "bent."

When his father died at the age of 62 in December, 1946, only three weeks before he was to have been inaugurated to serve his fourth term as governor, the Talmadge-controlled Legislature "elected" Herman Talmadge governor. Ignoring the claim of Lieut. Gov. Thompson, Talmadge forces seized the executive quarters and changed the locks on the capitol at night.

For 67 days Herman Talmadge sat in the Governor's chair, and then the Georgia Supreme Court, in a split decision, ruled for Thompson.

Talmadge opposed Thompson for the gubernatorial nomination in the September 1948 Democratic primary and won both the popular vote, 357,865 to 312,035, and the "unit" vote, 312 to 98. Talmadge carried 130 of the state's 159 counties.

Son Played Role Straight

The difference between Herman Talmadge and his father began to become apparent. Herman hadn't made Phi Beta Kappa—no—but he was smarter than his daddy, people began to say. Herman chewed tobacco as his father had, and he wore suspenders but the suspenders weren't red. He dressed conservatively and well, and he didn't take his coat off when he made a speech and he didn't snap his galluses.

Herman played it straight. Even at the meetings 'way back in the red clay hills he used good grammar and didn't talk down to his audience, although he was not averse to employing the vernacular to good purpose on occasion. And he began making frequent talks to service clubs and civic groups, and, as a dirt farmer,, was much sought after by agricultural organizations.

HERMAN TALMADGE

EUGENE TALMADGE

He had a good war record. He left his law office in April, 1941, when he was commissioned by the Navy as an ensign, requested combat duty and served in the Pacific until he was discharged as a lieutenant commander in November, 1945, after 52 months' service.

When he was Governor, there was no cows grazing on the lawn but he was an enthusiastic supporter of soil conservation and forestry projects and development of rural electrification. Here, Herman, who had been supported by private power companies, did a bit of "bending." Although some "New Deal" projects had been criticized by him as "socialistic," this was not true of the Rural Electrification Administration, he declared.

"It's as American as cornbread and turnip greens," he told one audience.

Millions for Improvements.

To raise funds for much-needed improvements, Herman Talmadge obtained enactment of a 3 per cent sales tax. Then, in contrast to penny-pinching Ol' Gene, he began to spend money — $275,000,000 for new school and college buildings; $365,000,000 for new public roads and highways; $100,000,000 for new hospitals, health centers and institutional buildings, and other millions for farm markets, youth training facilities and conservation programs.

Herman Talmadge increased teachers' pay and Negro teachers were placed on the same salary basis as white teachers. But the Governor continued to declare that white children never would attend school with Negro children.

In contrast to his father, Herman Talmadge cultivated supporters in labor, principally among AFL leaders.

It has become increasingly apparent that Herman Talmadge doesn't wear Ol' Gene's chip on his shoulder. He prefers to avoid unnecessary controversy; he is willing to compromise.

To the charge that he is an isolationist, he replies that he is "international minded." He approves arms for Israel if the Communists send arms to Egypt. He is against aiding construction of the Aswan dam in Egypt which he complains would make possible irrigation of land that would then grow cotton to be sold in competition with the big American cotton surplus.

Herman Talmadge doesn't quite fit in the pattern of other Southern demagogues. He isn't playing ball with Gov. Allan Shivers of Texas, James F. Byrnes of South Carolina and the other Dixiecrats. Georgia, he pointed out, gave Adlai Stevenson his biggest plurality in 1952 and he added that he would support Stevenson this year if nominated. Talmadge does not expect to go to the Democratic national convention.

Wife Has Prosperous Business.

His interest in agriculture and conservation is only second to his interest in politics. With Mrs. Talmadge, the former Betty Shingler of Asburn, Ga., he lives on a 1750-acre farm near Lovejoy, 26 miles south of Atlanta. They have two sons, Eugene, 14, and Robert, 10. Here Mrs. Talmadge manages a project of her own, curing "Talmadge" country hams which are marketed extensively in Georgia. In three years her work force has grown to 20 and sales last year were reported at $1,000,000.

The Lovejoy plantation also is devoted to production of row crops and beef cattle. One of Talmadge's hobbies is the raising of shetland ponies. He is promoting a real estate development at Lovejoy.

Thirty-five miles away, at Forsyth, is the old Talmadge plantation of 2500 acres where Herman Talmadge was born. He continues to operate the place, devoted largely to dairy and egg production. There are several farm ponds of substantial size, stocked with bass and bream, where the owner occasionally finds time to indulge himself in one of his few hobbies, fishing. He finds no time for golf.

Publishes Own Weekly.

Talmadge also publishes The Statesman, a four-page tabloid weekly which circulates throughout the state, largely a personal organ containing his views on state and national affairs. Currently it is carrying in serial form Talmadge's most recent paper-backed book, "You and Segregation."

Ol' Gene would like that book. And how he would chuckle and snap his red suspenders on reading that Walter George, at whose hands he had tasted such bitter defeat, had left what looks a clear field to the United States Senate for "Humman."

cations of this thing and the point of view with which we should respond to it." The last, however, may be taken as bureaucratic language meaning in effect, "since we don't know what to do we're appointing another study committee." The President has just named an eight-man committee, all of them able and distinguished, but it is debatable whether they will be able to take enough time from their other affairs to give proper consideration to so weighty a matter in a short time.

The hard decisions that must sooner or later be taken, if only by default, on the strategic concepts of the atomic era apply to NATO as they do to the military establishment in Washington. The sense of unreality that surrounds the NATO structure —for the most part a paper structure—of 30 ground divisions is one reason NATO is ailing. Without a drastic revision of the NATO approach to the problem of European security, there will be a further falling away of strength and allegiance.

The step taken at the Paris session of the NATO Council, to try to achieve greater political coherence so that issues such as that of Cyprus can be considered before they set NATO partners against one another, is a step in the right direction. But it cannot be a substitute for a revision of the military concept.

What Dulles and others in the West come back to, and with good reason, is that the Soviet Union is a totalitarian society. There is no vested interest either militarily or industrially that can resist a sudden move to take 1,200,000 men out of uniform and put them on the farms or in the factories. There is no public opinion to raise embarrassing questions as to whether this course or that course is fair or unfair to the individuals whose lives are abruptly altered.

That helps to explain why it is so difficult for the West, where freedom of choice is basic to the rights of the individual, to counter the propaganda moves of the Soviet Union in disarmament. But it does not excuse the failure of leadership to try to bring the American military establishment into line with the realities of the nuclear stalemate and, even more important, with the deep yearning of peoples everywhere for some relief from the burden of armament.

That anything like this will happen in the near future is doubtful. It would call for decisions certain to stir dissension and loud clamor and President Eisenhower has shown that he does not care for such decisions. Apparently most Americans are willing to trust these matters to the President since, in the popular view, he is a soldier and he should know best.

This means that he is not likely to feel any considerable pressure of public opinion to take the steps which are called for. Therefore, if any prediction is possible in the face of so much uncertainty, it is that the West will continue at an accelerated pace to reduce the arms burden even though no formal agreement between East and West is possible.

Could Revised American Policy Achieve Genuine Disarmament?

In the underdeveloped parts of the world they hope, by a mixture of economic policy, ideological attraction and popular front tactics to lay a basis for later Communist take-overs.

My first conclusion, then, is the following: so long as Soviet leaders have not ruled out the possibility of a clean knockout blow of the United States, or so long as they judge that parity with, or superiority over, the United States in modern armaments is an essential condition for the success of their foreign policy, they are unlikely to accept the sort of control of armaments which we would judge effective.

Since Stalin's death, the Soviet leadership had made a series of moves which appear to indicate a willingness to see their society opened up in two respects. First, they are now apparently prepared to receive tourists on a larger scale than at any time since the 1930s and permit them to travel quite widely in the Soviet Union. Second, they have been prepared to let a much larger number of their technicians, artists and higher bureaucrats travel abroad to conferences and the like, where they are permitted to behave in a much more natural and human way than was the style under Stalin.

But the degree of openness thus far revealed in Soviet policy, over the past three years, can in no way be equated with the conditions for a successful system of arms inspection. The essence of mutual confidence in such a scheme is the virtual elimination of denied areas. Tourists in the Soviet Union now are geographically denied certain areas, and they are denied access to factories and other important installations unless notification is given and the visit is prepared.

Little Freedom.

There is no evidence that freedom has extended down in Soviet society to a point where the regime is prepared to contemplate the kind of uncontrolled inspection which any tolerably realistic system of international armaments control demands. If this is so, why is the Soviet Union pursuing so actively and flexibly the discussion of the question of armaments control?

Moscow wishes to persuade the citizens and governments of Western Europe and the United States that peace is just around the corner and that they can afford to slacken their efforts. Second, the Soviet effort to associate Communism with popular aspirations in the Free World requires that Moscow appear to be ardently seeking peace.

If my hypothesis is correct, then, what we observe in the United Nations is a series of maneuvers designed to maintain an image of Moscow actively pursuing peace, but without any intent now to move into an effective system of armaments control.

The Soviet Union may be encouraging the pursuit of these negotiations not merely for purposes of psychological warfare but to see how, technically, such a system might be set up if, at some future date, Moscow should, in its own interest, wish to neutralize major military force in the world arena of power.

I do not believe that the Soviets are now prepared to accept an effective system of armaments control.

Why and when might Moscow accept such a system? Three conditions must be satisfied.

First, the United States must demonstrate that it will not permit itself or the free world to be rendered vulnerable to military attack. We must demonstrate that we are prepared with our allies to erect and to maintain a pattern of military deterrence such that it will be irrational not only for the Soviet Union to start a major war but also to start medium or even minor wars.

United States Leadership.

Second, the United States must demonstrate that under its leadership the free world is capable of satisfying the powerful world-wide aspirations for increased human and national dignity, increased economic welfare. So long as Moscow sees the possibility of eroding American and Western power and prestige in Asia, the Middle East, and Africa it is doubtful that Soviet leaders will accept the consequences of an effective control system.

Specifically this means we must develop in the free world a policy for economic development and a political environment of progressive political development which will make the free world resistant to Moscow's current blandishments. This, clearly, we have not yet done.

The third condition is that time must pass and a new leadership emerge in the Soviet government. It is doubtful that the generation of Stalin's aging henchmen who now rule in Moscow are likely to be prepared to accept the changes in that society and its relation to the world which would follow from a truly effective system of arms control. I believe that the rising generation of men and women in the Soviet Union may well be more prepared than their elders to contemplate a basic change in Soviet society.

What We Must Do.

If we are prepared to continue to block, at whatever cost, every avenue for Communist military adventure; if we can demonstrate over the next decade that the free societies and their economies can grow more rapidly than their Communist counterparts; if we can demonstrate that the national aspirations for dignity and independence can be progressively satisfied in a Free World led by the United States—then the successors of the present generation of Soviet leaders may decide by the end of the coming decade that a true peace abroad and a true devotion to the welfare of the Russian peoples at home is the most attractive realistic course open to them.

Only by acting on the assumption that the Soviet leadership is unlikely now to accept an effective system of arms control are we likely to bring about its ultimate acceptance. If we throw ourselves into this bloodless but desperate contest with the full energy, resources, talent, and spiritual quality which American life still has within it — and if we sustain such an effort over the next decade—then, I do believe there are solid grounds for hope.

Marital Unhappiness Is Theme of English Novel

By THOMAS B. SHERMAN
Book Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

AN incompatible marriage which runs a cheerless course to final disaster for both participants is described with minute thoroughness by H. E. Bates in "The Sleepless Moon." The novel is therefore a revealing commentary on the most intimate of human relations; but if that were its only merits the reviewer would do well to warn everybody—except professional marriage counselors—against reading it. It happens, though, that Mr. Bates is an engaging story teller with a gift for making the reader feel very strongly the presence of his characters and the scene through which they move. It is quite likely, therefore, that anyone who starts this story will want to finish it.

Pathos surrounds the marriage of Constance and Melford Turner from the beginning. When Melford kisses her for the first time she feels no burst of passion; she accepts it and the subsequent proposal of marriage because she wants to console him. As for Melford he has reached the time of life when marriage is indicated for a man who enjoys a solid position in the town of Orlingford and expects to become its mayor.

Both soon discover that there is no magic in the rite of marriage that can fuse the lives of two persons who have no shared interests and no sense of mutual dependence. So when the elementary attraction of sex fails to operate little else remains that can hold the two together except the willingness on both sides to keep up a front.

INEVITABLY both Constance and Melford find consolation elsewhere. As Orlingford is a small ingrown community where few secrets can be kept the marital status of the Turners soon becomes a matter of general knowledge. Melford is well liked, however, and Constance—though considered rather queer and aloof—excites a certain amount of sympathy.

The community, one gathers would have tolerated an unorthodox arrangement; and the Turners allow the situation to drift since each has found a precarious happiness. But events are against them; both are overtaken by humiliating and drastic consequences.

BOTH Constance and Melford are invested with a flesh-and-blood reality—or rather that semblance of reality which when well contrived is more vivid than the impressions of everyday life. The author is equally successful with all his other characters and in recreating the special qualities of an English town and countryside: its external features, its mores and traditions. These are presented so convincingly that the reader falls easily into the delusion of being himself an unobserved participant in the action.

Yet, like so many sensitively written, and perceptive English novels "The Sleepless Moon" is limited in its radiation. The case of Constance and Melford seems rather special if not accidental. They are caught in a trap, not because they are greedy or proud but simply because they cannot foresee the future. So their plight is hardly more representative than if they had been the victims of a lightning stroke.

In the years just after the opening of America's Far West, the lack of communication lines across the continent was the biggest obstacle to exploiting the new territories. The use of camels to carry freight across the hot southern plains and deserts was resorted to by Jefferson Davis, during his term as Secretary of War from 1853 to 1857. The first major test was a trip of 1200 miles from the Texas gulf coast to California. The camels proved their usefulness and their ability to thrive on the trail, but Americans didn't understand camels and camels didn't understand Americans. The Civil War interrupted the experiment, then the railway and wagon roads eliminated the need for the animals. In this and many other pictures, plus some 50,000 words of text, "The Growth of a Nation" by Emerson M. Brooks. (E. P. Dutton & Co., 320 pgs., $5.95.) capsulizes American history into its significant episodes. It was prepared with newcomers to this country specially in mind, but its clear and concise organization proves of great convenience for quick reference.

World Problem Is Integration

AN INTERNATIONAL ECONOMY, PROBLEMS AND PROSPECTS, by Gunnar Myrdal. (Harper & Brothers, 381 pgs., $6.50.)

Reviewed by
DONALD GRANT

ONCE again, Gunnar Myrdal has written a book which almost certainly is destined to change the course of human events. Southern enemies of racial integration have accused Myrdal, a Swede and therefore a "foreigner," of writing the basic document to the United States Supreme Court decision on public school integration. That was "An American Dilemma," published in 1944. In a sense the enemies of racial integration are right, for in that book Myrdal documented so thoroughly the case against discrimination that it has remained unanswered.

In "An International Economy" Myrdal has carried the same thesis forward. Integration remains the value Myrdal would uphold, this time the integration of the peoples of the world.

This time, again, he has not written an "idealistic" appeal, but a hard-headed appraisal. It is not an easy book to read and to digest, but it will be a very difficult book indeed for anyone to refute.

We Americans have fallen so deeply into the habit of appraising the world in terms of the great power struggle between the United States and Soviet Russia that we have all but forgotten other possible ways of looking at the world. Specifically, we certainly have neglected the aspect of the world's configuration that Myrdal describes so well and which, among other things, underlies the very power struggle we have allowed to bemuse us.

Stated as simply as possible, the people of the world are getting poorer and poorer.

MYRDAL'S cold, economic statement of this appalling fact: "World real income per capita, and with it the standard of living of the average human being, is probably lower now than 25 years ago and perhaps lower than in 1900, because the nations that have rapidly raised their economic standards have been a shrinking proportion of the total world population."

Taking a second look at the latter portion of that statement we are faced with the truly explosive circumstances that the increasing world poverty is distributed about as unfairly as possible. The developed nations—and especially the United States—are becoming incredibly richer while at the same time the majority of the world's peoples are sinking lower and lower in their standards of living.

Add to this fact the improved communications and transportation of the world—a revolution in itself—and you have a diagram for disaster. The poor of the world are getting poorer, the rich are getting richer—and every facility is available for the poor to know their plight in all its injustice.

And to this diagram for disaster is finally added the supreme satanic jest: "All the high-income countries, and some of the middle-income groups, have almost unmixed populations of European stock. Most middle-income countries have mixed or colored populations. All the poorest countries are colored according to the social definition of the term laid down by the nations that have European origin.

"In countries where there are both colored and white people, the whites are always at the top and the colored at the bottom. . . .

"Most people in the world are colored . . . most people are poor. Invariably it is the colored people who are the poorer."

GIVEN these elementary facts it would appear as an indictment of Communism that it has not been even more successful than it has been in gaining the loyalty of that majority of mankind which is poverty-stricken and colored, living in a rich white-man's world. Communists, as Myrdal says, "have succeeded in exterminating racial prejudice in their minds and in their dealings with colored people," which is more than can be said of many non-Communists or anti-Communists.

Communists, and with some but not complete justification, present the thesis that the poverty of the poor, colored majority of mankind is the result of past and present colonial exploitation by the rich, white minority. Finally —and most importantly—Communism "presents itself as fundamentally a system for the development of the underdeveloped countries."

GUNNAR MYRDAL

It is not very important that this is contrary to the original concept of Karl Marx, who believed the developed, capitalistic countries would be the first to turn to Communism. The important thing, to the people of the depressed areas of the world, is that Soviet Russia has shown the way for a backward people to raise themselves by their own bootstraps, to achieve economic development—without outside capital. China's half a billion or more people have embarked on a similar venture. All of the rest of Asia, and Africa, the depressed countries around the Mediterranean and in Latin America, are watching with more than casual interest.

For, as Myrdal finds after exhaustive inquiry, "and taking into account private loans and direct investments, government loans and loans from the International Bank, short and medium term export credits, etc. — capital just does not flow to underdeveloped countries in amounts that are in any reasonable proportion to the general development needs of the world. Further, the little flow that there is trickles out in the most haphazard way, usually without any relation to real economic opportunities and real economic needs."

AS for economic aid, as distinct from loans, Myrdal finds it "a comparatively tiny stream," likewise irrationally directed. "The United States has been the chief donor," he points out, "but by far the greater part of its donations, including most of the Marshall aid, has not gone to the underdeveloped regions. From their point of view this aid has in the main been a sharing between the rich. . . ."

What are the underdeveloped nations to do? They can adopt the Communist system, of course, and squeeze capital out of their peasants by ruthless discipline. Myrdal, a thorough democrat, does not recommend this method with its "extinction of parliamentary democracy, the suppression of a large number of fundamental civil rights and liberties, enforced political conformity, political police," etc.

Rather, he recommends the largest possible effort on the part of the people of the underdeveloped areas themselves, consistent with democratic processes. He recognizes that this effort will not be enough, unless we, the rich and the powerful, radically change our attitudes and our policies.

"In fact," he adds, "I know of no government and no political party in any country which is really facing up to these problems."

MYRDAL presents no single, simple solution. More capital and more economic aid—most carefully conceived and administered—flowing from the developed areas to the underdeveloped areas is only a small part of the matter.

Myrdal, former Minister of Commerce in Sweden and now executive secretary of the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe, has defined the problem—which it is no exaggeration to state is the biggest and the key world problem in this last half of the twentieth century. It is impossible to compare Myrdal's book with any other previously written on this great subject. Others have nibbled at the edges; Myrdal has gone to the core of the matter.

MODERN HISTORY

Historians Analyze Yalta Agreements

THE MEANING OF YALTA, by John L. Snell, ed., Forrest C. Pogue, Charles F. Delzell and Charles A. Lansen. (Louisiana State University Press, 239 pgs., $3.75.)

Reviewed by
THOMAS H. ELIOT

ONE of the horrors in George Orwell's "Nineteen Eighty-Four" was the elimination of history. Whenever "Big Brother's" government altered its policy, all the past records were changed, to make it appear that the new policy was the old.

There is another way to distort and destroy history. Let the record stand, but carefully ignore the context in which it was written. In the matter of the Yalta conference, this type of nihilism has been the practice, for 10 years now, of Roosevelt-haters like Pegler and a number of more reputable people who know better. Such persons have tended to blame all the strife and tensions of a decade on the allegedly treacherous "Yalta agreements." No matter what the participants said — and the Yalta conferees who have written on the subject include Byrnes, Stettinius, Leahy, and Sir Winston Churchill—we were told to disbelieve them. They were "interested parties."

Now come four impartial historians to bring the picture back into focus. None of them was at Yalta. All of them made full use of the records, including the official "Yalta papers" publicized with so much fanfare a year ago. They conclude that the agreements at Yalta were probably the best that could have been made under the circumstances.

There was no treachery, no sell-out, not even any egregious blunders. The German question was discussed and largely postponed, though "our side" obtained an agreement to permit French participation. The dispute over Poland, between Churchill and Stalin, ended with few, if any, concessions by the Russians; but here the West could only beg, for Russian armies already covered Poland.

ON the question of organizing the United Nations, Roosevelt insisted on an early meeting and won. He insisted that the Security Council should be able to decide certain questions regardless of the veto of an interested power, and won again. Stalin insisted on 16 Soviet votes in the U.N. Assembly, and compromised on three. Roosevelt wasn't pleased with this, and some Americans in the delegation—chief among them, interestingly, Alger Hiss—urged him to reject Stalin's "compromise," but Churchill sided with Stalin.

That brings us down to the charge so often reiterated by partisan orators, that at Yalta, Franklin D. Roosevelt somehow "sold China down the river." The record simply does not substantiate the charge. At Yalta there was no sell-out, for at Roosevelt's insistence the agreements regarding China were made dependent upon Chiang Kai-shek's approval. Any criticism of American policy for "losing China," the authors say, should concentrate on events from 1946 onwards, and not on Yalta.

Well, Mr. Roosevelt used to call himself the "quarterback" and so cannot escape, even posthumously, the Monday morning variety. We hear it said, indignantly, that he was so soft-headed that he made agreements with Stalin, who was sure to break them and soon did so. We hear it said, pityingly, that he was so tired and ill that he should not have engaged in personal diplomacy.

But Churchill was there—soft? tired? ill? Byrnes was there, and Eden, and Admiral Leahy, and Harriman, and Bohlen, and the able Britisher Clark-Kerr — tough men all. And the actual record, unlike the photographs, does not reveal an exhausted or off-guard Roosevelt.

OF course the United States and Britain made agreements with Stalin. At one point the authors quote a passage from a State Department "briefing paper" of early 1945 which goes to the heart of the matter. Wrote John D. Hickerson, then deputy director of the Office of European Affairs: "It is not a question of whether we like it; I personally don't like it . . . (but) . . . We must have the support of the Soviet Union to defeat Germany . . . (and) . . . in the war against Japan. The importance of these two things cannot be reckoned, in terms of American lives. We must have the co-operation of the Soviet Union to organize the peace."

So believing, the Western leaders could do no less than make agreements with Stalin in the hope—even faint hope—that he would live up to them.

It is the context that counts: Our armies recuperating from the Battle of the Bulge while the Russians rolled forward; our military chiefs forecasting dreadful casualties in the Pacific before Japan could be subdued. The authors of "The Meaning of Yalta" clarify this context. They have produced a good book, well-written and well-named.

Heroic Clara Barton

ANGEL OF THE BATTLEFIELD: THE LIFE OF CLARA BARTON, by Ishbel Ross. (Harper Brothers, 294 pgs., $4.)

Reviewed by RUTH WALKER

THE jacket of this book further describes it as "the story of the extraordinary woman who founded the American Red Cross." If there were a stronger word than extraordinary, it would serve. Miss Ross, biographer of many remarkable women of the Civil War era, has here indeed found her prize subject, and done a prize and thorough job on this single minded woman who did so much to alleviate the horrors of war casualties and other disasters.

The amount and detail of the research that went into this book make the author, in a way, as extraordinary as the subject. But that is Miss Ross's forte—that and her ability to put it all together in orderly and impressive form. The book, coming at the time the American Red Cross is celebrating its seventy-fifth anniversary may well prove a banner display in that celebration.

The extraordinary things about Miss Clara Barton, a small shy girl from a tiny Massachusetts town, more often than not in poor health, are her determination, her rugged persistence to accomplish what she must do, her physical endurance, her ability to handle big operations with seeming ease, and an undescribed but evident persuasiveness that somehow got her the help and materials she needed, no matter how difficult the situation.

WHETHER in the beginning of her career on the early battlefields of the Civil War (and she was not a nurse), in her operations in other battles of that war, in the Franco-Prussian War in Europe, in Cuba in the Spanish-American War, and in such other disaster relief as in the Johnstown, Galveston and Mississippi floods, she always managed to get the vast quantities of materials she needed, and somehow to get to the scene of disaster and operate efficiently in the face of difficulty.

CLARA BARTON

Considering the times, and the conditions of transportation and communication, what she accomplished is almost unbelievable. One cannot conceive of the amount of time, not to mention the strength, needed to take supplies right to a battlefield, to assist doctors, to prepare food for thousands of wounded, to keep records, to keep a diary, to write letters, and to keep her supplies coming when she needed them.

All this points, in every detail, to the many-sided work of the efficient organization the Red Cross has become today. Yet, in the beginning in America, this was not the Red Cross—just Clara Barton and her contacts.

ADDITIONALLY astounding was her persistence, after she discovered the beginnings of the Red Cross in Europe, in bringing the United States into the organization, and setting up the American branch which has never ceased to function where it was needed ever since.

The book takes Miss Barton through her many travels, her meetings with the great and the infuential of her time, and her never-ceasing perseverance in advancing her cause. It is kept lively with many quotations from her diaries and constant revelations of the strength of her personality. It is a remarkable job and a brilliant tribute to the world's most honored service organization.

SCIENCE FICTION

The Cliches of Fantasy

THE FORBIDDEN PLANET, by W. J. Stuart (Farrar, Strauss and Cudahy, 184 pgs., $3.)

Reviewed by
SCOTT NICHOLS

THE FORBIDDEN PLANET, a novelization of the current M.G.M. CinemaScope production, will probably be the subject of another critical article by Arthur Koestler in the Saturday Review. Certainly, no recent science fiction novel better illustrates the cliches and the banalities that Koestler attacked in "The Boredom of Fantasy."

The interstellar cruiser, C-57-D, in search of a previous expedition, lands on the fourth planet of the star Altair to find one survivor of the original expedition, a Dr. Morbius, and his young daughter who was born on Altair IV. In succession the officers of the C-57-D encounter a robot with the talents of a Houdini, a tiger that shares a common trait with the legendary unicorn, and an invisible menace that delights in eviscerating crew members in mid-air.

For three quarters of the book, Mr. Stuart plays peek-a-boo with the reader and then, in a seeming fit of despair at having accomplished nothing for a hundred pages, sends his characters off on a free-wheeling chase of the type best characterized as "let's head 'em off at the pass, sheriff." Mr. Stuart's characters are as two dimensional as his plot. They include a lean young starship commander, a lupine junior officer, a just-plain Bill type of medical officer, a heroine who is as virtuous as she is beautiful, and a scientist (mad, of course).

The book is bound in something resembling blotting paper, and sells for three dollars. The relationship between quality and price is here somewhat obscure.

THE CASE OF THE DEMURE DEFENDANT, by Erle Stanley Gardner. (Morrow, 242 pgs., $2.75.)

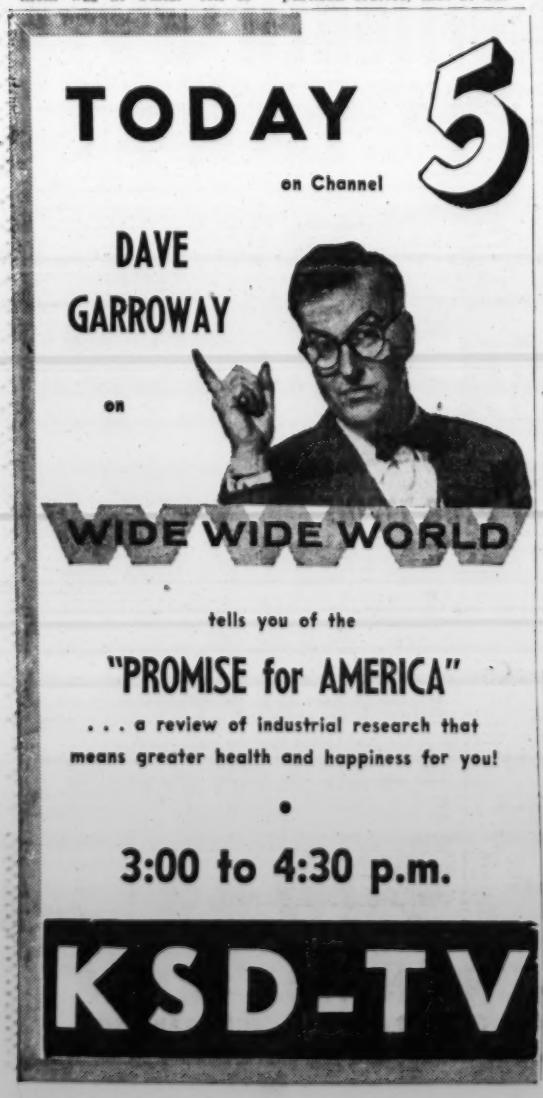

THIS is Erle Stanley Gardner's, fiftieth novel starring his lawyer-detective, Perry Mason. Since 1933 Mr. Gardner has written 28 other novels, numerous short stories and articles on detection and crime. For many years a practicing attorney in California, he is the motivating force behind the Court of Last Resort through which a large number of persons, wrongfully convicted, have gained their freedom. As a writer of mystery stories he has no superior for throughout the years he has sustained his high standard in writing and has consistently presented a different and an ingenious plot even though each Perry Mason novel ends in an exciting courtroom scene.

This fiftieth anniversary novel concerns Nadine Farr, who under pentothal sodium confesses to murder. Her psychiatrist consults Mason immediately but his nurse goes to the police. As to Nadine opinions are divided. Some declare that she is a lovely girl while others say she is vicious and a blackmailer. However, all agree that she is beautiful — and demure. Perry Mason becomes so involved that he is accused of perjury. A fascinating story.

FARMERS PARADE IN FIGHT ON MERAMEC BASIN DAMS

Approximately 125 farmers held a protest parade in Union and Washington, Mo., yesterday as a demonstration against the Army Engineers' proposal for three big dams in the Meramec river basin.

The parade of sign-plastered automobiles was followed by a delegation of farm wives who called on local business establishments to urge proprietors to sign pledges against the big dams. The demonstration was promoted by the Bourbeuse river chapter of the Meramec Basin Resources Committee, which favors an alternate proposal to build 75 small dams for conservation and flood control purposes.

The Army-proposed dams would be near Union, Staunton and Cedar Hill in the Meramec, Bourbeuse and Big rivers. Opponents say their proposal for a large number of small dams would save 13,808 acres of farm land.

Police said he and Mrs. Ophelia Robinett, of the Monroe street address, said they had been drinking beer before she started a discussion of her skill with a pistol. Mrs. Robinett said she obtained the pistol from a dresser drawer, police continued, and the scuffle followed. Both told police the weapon was discharged in the course of the scuffle.

Mrs. Robinett was booked suspected of assault with intent to kill.

FALLING MARKET FAILS TO MEET OLD-TIME BUYING

Unsettled Conditions Credited to Auto Output Slump, Tight Money, Pending Steel Wage Conference.

By JOHN G. FORREST
Financial Editor, The New York Times.
(Copyright 1956, by The New York Times Co.)

NEW YORK, May 19.

THE STOCK MARKET did the long-expected this week. It broke sharply from its highs on Monday and early Tuesday. A brief rally Tuesday afternoon failed to reappear for the balance of the week.

Looking back, it now appears obvious that in recent weeks there has not been the aggressive buying by major institutional and private investors that stopped so many previous declines of the last several months. There is a growing belief in Wall Street that perhaps these key investors may be waiting for the bargains to get even cheaper.

Meanwhile, the market has amply demonstrated of late that it has its own laws of motion. The technicians showed concern earlier this month when on a rally the list stopped 1.60 points below the April top of 346.01, as measured by the New York Times composite average of 50 representative listed issues.

The more optimistic, however, held there was no need for concern unless on the sell-off the list cracked the April low of 329.48.

On Monday the Times averages dipped to within 0.09 of the 329.48 warning mark. On Tuesday the fateful point was passed and the list didn't rally until the index had dropped to 327.12, the lowest level witnessed since March 2. By Friday's close the index stood at 331.13, down 4.44 on the week.

Second Week Price Drop.

The second week of declining prices was accompanied by the usual crop explanations. Some of them would seem rather farfetched. Russia's announced cut in armed forces was seized upon as one reason. But the basic causes for the unsettled condition of the market appear to start with the continued slump in automobile production, tight money and the approaching wage negotiations in the steel industry.

These situations, coming after a boom year like 1955 and with the market's price level around an all-time peak, have impaired its technical position. There will be setbacks from time to time. And the mood of the market was not helped by the prediction of Harlow H. Curtice, president of General Motors Corporation, that auto output in 1956 would fall to 5,800,000 cars, compared with a January forecast of 6,500,000.

New car registrations rose to a peak of 7,170,000 last year. But car sales in 1956 could still be the third largest in history. Passenger car production for 1956 passed the 2,500,000 mark last week.

Mr. Curtice criticized the Federal Reserve Board rather sharply. Recent lifting of the discount rate, in his opinion, has contributed to the widespread tightness of money throughout the country. He said the board's policy was "not warranted and should be reversed—promptly."

With negotiations between the United Steelworkers of America and steel producers expected to start within two weeks, the industry—which has been enjoying booming production this year—is now facing a tough labor problem. Major demands by the union will be a supplementary unemployment plan, a "substantial" wage increase and premium pay for weekends. It has been estimated by steelworkers that these would cost the industry 20 to 30 cents an hour, but producers say the cost may reach nearly 60 cents. The present two-year contract with the union ends on June 30.

Meanwhile, the over-all picture of industrial activity is holding up fairly well. The Federal Reserve Board reported that the output of the nation's mines and factories last month, as measured by its index, ran at 143 per cent of the 1947-49 average. This equaled the March level and was 5 points higher than in April, 1955. Auto production was a depressing factor, but improvement was recorded in electrical equipment manufacturing as a result of the ending of the Westinghouse strike.

Big Issue Quickly Sold.

The demand for prime investments continue strong. The first public offering of General Electric securities since the early twenties met with brisk demand. Books were quickly closed on the $300,000,000 of 3½ per cent depentures, due in 1976. The issue rose to a premium later in the investment market.

The Federal Reserve Board reported that it expected to complete a full-scale study of consumer credit "early next year." This is being done at the request of Dr. Arthur F. Burns, chairman of President Eisenhower's Council of Economic Advisers, who made it on behalf of the President. Basically, the purpose is to determine whether the Government should have permanent authority to control terms of installment credit.

Week's Review Of Business And Finance

CREDIT DEBATE

By WALTER BREEDE JR.

NEW YORK, May 19 (AP)—Businessmen, bothered by lagging sales, clamored this week for a return to easy credit. Their complaints were aimed at the federal reserve board which regulates the nation's money and credit supply. Five weeks ago the board took steps to jack up bank loan rates—the fifth such maneuver in a year. The board's announced objective was to protect the value of the dollar, keep prices in line and curb any tendencies in the boom toward runaway inflation. It sought to achieve these ends by making money more difficult to borrow.

Critics Outspoken.

This week the board's action, criticized by some from the very start, came under heavy fire. President Harlow H. Curtice of General Motors blamed the increase in bank rates for a slump in new car sales. The board's latest move was "not warranted," he declared, and it "should be reversed, and promptly."

Joseph B. Haverstick, president of the National Assn. of Home Builders, told a congressional committee that home building continues to point "sharply downward." He blamed "tight" mortgage money.

Even Secretary of the Treasury George Humphrey, a champion of tight credit policies in the past, rapped the board's latest action. "If it had been my responsibility," Humphrey said, "I would not have made" the decision to boost the federal reserve discount rate another notch in April.

Auto Estimate Cut.

Curtice's blast at the Federal Reserve served to focus attention on the auto industry's troubles. (Production this week was estimated by Ward's Automotive Reports at 106,178 cars and 21,380 trucks, lowest so far this year and down nearly 40 per cent from a year earlier.) New car inventories on May 1 were back up to 902,000 and close to the all-time record; they had been expected to go down in April but inched higher.

Some months ago, the General Motors chief predicted that Americans in 1956 would buy 6,500,000 cars, making it the second best auto sales year on record. This week he lowered his estimate to 5,800,000. The spring slump, said Curtice, was due in part to the "restrictive" credit policies of the Federal Reserve which lowered the confidence of would-be buyers.

The Other Price Point.

There were others who had different explanations. Carl E. Fribley, president of the National Auto Dealers Association, said: "We simply sold too many cars for our own good in 1955, selling many customers who normally would have bought cars in 1956." Dr. Raymond Rodgers, professor of banking at New York University, pinned the blame on super-easy installment terms offered last year's record crop of auto buyers. Said Rodgers: "Economically unsound use of consumer credit in the automobile industry has come home to roost."

MOST GRAINS CLOSE WEEK AT DECLINES

CHICAGO, May 19 (AP) — Most grains ended lower on the Board of Trade this week after some erratic fluctuations. Trading was at a moderately active pace with soybeans still the big volume leader.

Largest loss for the period occurred in May wheat, down 5⅞ cents as holders liquidated prior to the closing of trading Monday. New crop wheat futures ended 1 cent lower to ¼ cent higher.

The best showing for the week was given by old crop soybeans. They ended 2 to 3¼ cents higher. But the new crop months slid down 2¼ to 4¾ cents.

Corn closed the week 2 to 2¾ lower, oats ⅛ lower to 1½ higher, rye ¾ to 3¼ lower and lard 10 to 35 cents a hundred pounds lower.

New crop wheat sold off early in the period, rallied for a couple of days and then turned down quite sharply on Friday. A few truck lots of new wheat arrived at points in Southern Oklahoma during the week but the big movement is several weeks away.

HOGS UP 49 PCT. FROM 14-YEAR LOW OF DECEMBER '55

NATIONAL STOCK YARDS, Ill., May 19—Corn Belt farmers were cheered by the third straight week of rising hog prices which reached the best level in nearly 10 months—49 per cent above the 14-year December low, according to the Producers Live Stock Marketing Association, which attributed the advance to seasonally smaller supplies and further strength in pork at wholesale and retail levels. Current United States hog receipts and slaughter are the smallest since last September and down about one-half from peak marketings of last winter, it said. The best pork loins in the Chicago wholesale trade reached $48 a hundred, highest since September 19. Spurred by the need for volume to maintain their killing schedules, local and outside packers at National Stock Yards bid up prices $1 to mostly $1.25 for the week on barrow and gilt hogs, while sows soared to $1.50 to $1.75, a rise of 72 per cent from last winter, the report said. An increased demand for lard is largely responsible for the sensational rise in sow prices.

On the close, 180 to 240 lb. mixed hogs centered at $17 to $17.50 cwt., and outstanding lean porkers suitable for the select trade realized premium rates ranging upward to $17.75, the top, and highest price since last July. During the December low best hogs stopped at $11.85 and top a year ago was $19.35 Sows Friday reached a peak of $15.50, as against $8.75 and $9 during the closing month of 1955.

Salable hogs at National Yards of approximately 61,400 head topped those of any other United States market for the thirteenth consecutive week.

Cattle varied from steady to 25 to 50 cents higher, with the carlot steer top $21, paid for high choice scaling 1209 lbs. Vealers dropped $1, selling downward from $25 in late trading.

Increased receipts and important Jewish holidays broke lamb prices 50 cents to $2, with the closing top on springers $25; small lots good and choice shorn old crop lambs late $22 to $23. Cull to good shorn slaughter ewes $3 to $5.

3 LITTLE SISTERS FROM FRANCE GET A NEW HOME HERE

Mr. and Mrs. John C. McGuire were bustling about their new four-room home at 3855 McDonald avenue last night getting everything in readiness for the arrival of their "triplets"—three little girls from Nancy, France, whom they have adopted. The girls, sisters, are aged 5, 6 and 7.

"My husband had to be 40 to qualify to adopt them," Mrs. McGuire said. "He's worked for the Terminal Railroad for 14 years and he passed the age test with flying colors—he's past 50. Now he's as excited as an expectant father.

"At first we said we wanted to adopt one boy, because we lost our only child, Sgt. John Jr., in service five years ago in an auto accident, or one girl. But we saw the pictures of these sweet youngsters and, though we were told we could have one or two, we decided on all three so as not to separate them.

"We know a great deal about our new children already, because our late son's commanding officer, Col. Everett K. Spees, commander of an Air Force Base near Nancy, and his wife, have kept us posted ever since adoption procedures started last Thanksgiving.

"Starting with the oldest, the girls are named Nancy Alice, Claudine Lorraine and Monica Frances. They don't speak English, and we don't speak French, but we won't have any trouble," she added hopefully.

MARIE DIONNE'S FLOWER SHOP IS EMILIE'S MEMORIAL

MONTREAL, May 19 (UP)—A flower shop established by Marie Dionne in memory of her quintuplet sister Emilie who died in 1954 was dedicated by a priest tonight. It is called the Emilie Flower Shop and is in the heart of a Montreal hospital district.

This is the first business venture of any of the quintuplets since they came into their fortunes of $250,000 each on their twenty-first birthdays last May 28. Friends came to the ceremonies, but the Dionne parents stayed at home in Callander, Ont.

Marie earlier supervised the placing of a white alabaster statue of the Virgin Mary in the window, in honor of Emilie's devotion. Beside the statue was a vase of roses surrounded by lilies-of-the-valley. Marie said the flowers would be replaced daily in perpetual tribute to Emilie.

Quintuplets Yvonne and Cecile are student nurses at the Notre Dame de L'Esperance Hospital. The fourth surviving sister, Annette, shares a Montreal apartment with Marie. Annette has been studying art and music.

DESIGNERS AND DRAFTSMEN . . .

We offer special opportunities in the interesting field of process piping and complete layouts for the fast-growing chemical industry. Here is why. Vulcan Engineering Division is a well established firm in downtown Cincinnati engaged in chemical plant design and construction throughout the U.S. and abroad. ARMA announces

INERTIAL NAVIGATION DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

For An ADVANCED AIR FORCE MISSILE

Inertial Navigation offers the most advanced concept in guidance, requiring no terrestrial source of energy or information, no earth-bound direction once the ultimate destination is selected. It offers the most promising solution of the guidance problem for the long-range missile.

While the principles are simple, the realization involves advanced creative engineering. ARMA's many successes in the creation of precision instruments and systems for navigation and fire control, especially precision gyroscopic reference systems for all applications, fit it uniquely for a major role in this advanced area.

The height of imaginative resourcefulness and engineering skill are required to create the degree of precision—hitherto unattained—in the components essential to the guidance of advanced missile systems—the gyros, accelerometers, and computer elements. Miniaturization must be coupled with extraordinary ability to provide utmost accuracy under conditions of extreme velocities, temperatures, and accelerations.

Immediate openings for Supervisory and Staff Positions as well as for Say listen friends! I own a dandy little 80-acre farm it has good buildings; good land; good location. In fact it's just a good little farm and my price is right too. I only want $6500 for it. I'll take your cash, or you can practically dictate your own terms. Now I'm stuck with this thing and I don't know what to do about selling farms every day, everywhere, and all kinds. You see the fellow who owned this farm wanted to leave the country and needed his money right away. So I just paid him for it to help him out and I'm not trying to make a dime. But I don't need it and I don't want to own this thing forever, so I really mean it. If somebody doesn't buy this farm now, I guess I'm just going to have to give it back to the Indians. I'll never advertise it again. Come on out and have a look and help yourself to a dandy little farm really worth the money. Open Sunday.

FABIUS TURNS TABLES ON NEEDLES IN TERRIFIC FINISH OF PREAKNESS

CARDINALS BASH PHILLIES, 11-5, WITH 18-HIT ATTACK

SMART RIDE BY HARTACK; NO REGRETS RUNS THIRD

BALTIMORE, Md., May 19 (UP)—Calumet Farm's Fabius gained sweet revenge for his Kentucky Derby defeat today when he beat mighty Needles in the eightieth running of the $132,800 Preakness Stakes and buried his rival's dreams of a Triple Crown victory in his dust.

After taking the lead on the turn into the stretch, Fabius, second by three-quarters of a length to Needles in the Kentucky Derby two weeks ago, had all the speed he needed in the straightaway. The son of Citation, winner of the Preakness in 1948 and the last horse to sweep the golden diadem, flashed across the finish line a length and three-quarters ahead of Needles, who trailed the field as usual in the early running but failed to overtake the winner in the closing yards of the mile and three-sixteenths race.

Wallace E. Britt's No Regrets, seventh in the Kentucky Derby, was third, with Winding Way Farm's Golf Ace fourth.

Needles Needs Needling.

Needles started to run—after loafing along in the rear of the eight other starters—when he neared the end of the backstretch. Jockey Dave Erb had the mighty son of Ponder, another Derby winner who failed in the Preakness, running at his best. Erb drove Needles through one hole, then through another and just as he did in the Derby, swept around the last three horses in his bid for victory.

But this time Needles did not have the finishing kick he needed as determined Bill Hartack, on Fabius, drove his mount with might and main to give Calumet Farm its fifth victory in the middle of the three racing classics.

Slowly but surely Needles inched closer to Fabius in the stretch as a crowd of 29,774 roared. However, half-way through the stretch it was apparent that Needles wasn't gaining enough.

He put up a game fight but the winner's purse of $84,250 went to Fabius, who never was far from the front.

Fabius's winning time was 1:58 2-5, far off the stake and track record of 1:54 3-5 set last year by Nashua when he, too, swept to victory in the Preakness after finishing second in the Derby. But Nashua did not have to face the Derby winner, Swaps, a year ago.

Erb resorted to whipping Needles in desperation as the finish line loomed near and Fabius, smartly handled by Hartack, still clung doggedly to his lead. With an eighth of a mile to go, the Calumet colt was in front by three lengths, with No Regrets a length behind him and Needles third.

Needles finally fought his way past No Regrets but passing Fabius and Hartack was a different matter. For Fabius flashed under the wire with a safe but diminishing margin to pay $7.00, $2.40 and $2.40 across the board in the second stakes victory of his 22-race career.

$25,000 'Consolation.'

Needles, who picked up $25,000 for the place, was a 2-to-5 favorite and paid $2.20 for place and show. No Regrets, winner of the California Derby this year, paid $5.60.

Count Chic was fifth, followed by Eiffel Blue, Come On Red, Ratheram and Fleet Peet.

Fabius now has won seven races and raised his life-time earnings to $162,765. He scored his early stakes victory in the Derby Trial at Churchill Downs.

Eiffel Blue, with Paul Bailey riding, went to the front shortly after the start and led for three-quarters of a mile. Needles drifted along last, about 13 lengths from the front. This was closer to the pacemaker than he was at the same point in the Derby. Golf Ace raced second and Fabius third behind the leading Eiffel Blue until the field reached the head of the stretch.

By then Eiffel Blue was finished and Fabius sprinted to the front. Needles had started to close in but he never made it. Thus, the roster of eight champions who have registered triple crown victories — Sir Barton, Gallant Fox, Omaha, War Admiral, Whirlaway, Count Fleet, Assault and Citation—remained as exclusive as ever for at least another year.

"This colt is improving steadily. He was much easier to rate today. I had no idea whether I had it won or not until we hit the wire," Hartack, the 1955 jockey champion, said after the race.

"The Derby may have taken a little more out of Needles than we thought," a disappointed Erb said. "He never gave up and was not tired but at the 70-yard pole I knew we couldn't make it."

Nashua Sets New Racing Money-Winning Record

Booty Is $1,100,365 After First At Camden

CAMDEN, N.J., May 19 (UP)—Nashua became the greatest money winner in turf history today when he won the $30,000 added Camden handicap at Garden State Park.

His triumph earned him $22,750 and brought the four-year-old bay thoroughbred's total money winnings to $1,100,365. That is $14,604 more than the great Citation, horse racing's only other millionaire, won in four years of competition.

With his favorite jockey, Eddie Arcaro, in the saddle, Nashua took the lead at the start of the mile and one-eighth race and stayed in front all the way. Fisherman finished second with Mielleux third.

Nashua will continue racing, Owner Leslie Combs II announced after the race. There had been speculation that the champion would be retired to stud as soon as he surpassed Citation's record.

Two-Length Edge.

A crowd of 38,178 roared as Nashua went under the wire two lengths ahead of Fisherman. There was little doubt from the start that the 2-5 favorite would win, but Mielleux stayed right with Nashua until the head of the stretch.

Then Fisherman, who had been trailing in the early going, made his bid, but there was no catching Nashua today.

Nashua was timed in 1:49 1-5 and paid $2.80 to win and $2.40 to place. There was no show betting, with only five horses in the field. Fisherman paid $2.80 to place.

Galdar finished fourth and Mr. First last.

Starting from the No. 4 position, Arcaro quickly took Nashua to the front. Mielleux was second, a half length back, with Fisherman third, seven more lengths behind. Not more than a length separated Nashua and Mielleux at any time from the start until they hit the head of the stretch. Then Fisherman came up to take second place, a length behind Nashua, with Mielleux dropping back to third, only a head behind Fisherman.

Never Pushed by Arcaro.

From that time on, Nashua steadily increased his lead although Fisherman kept trying right to the end. It seemed that Arcaro only asked Nashua to run as hard as he had to and never pushed him at any time.

It was Nashua's nineteenth triumph in 24 starts in three years of racing. Only once has he been unplaced, when he finished fifth in the Gulfstream Handicap last winter.

Fabius to Needles -- 'Here's Mud in Your Eye'

—United Press Telephoto.

Fabius romps home in front in the Preakness Stakes while Needles, Kentucky Derby winner, lost his chance at the Triple Crown when the best he could do was to finish second. No Regrets was third. Jockey WILLIE HARTACK had the mount on Fabius.

EXTRA INNINGS by J. Roy Stockton SPORTS EDITOR of THE POST-DISPATCH

Belated Teardrops for Shufflin' Phil Douglas.

JOHN LARDNER, son of the late Ring Lardner, one of the all-time great humorists among baseball writers, sheds belated tears for the late Shufflin' Phil Douglas in the May 12 issue of the New Yorker.

Lardner is not alone in feeling sorry for poor old Phil Douglas. Shufflin' Phil was a sorrowful figure. But Lardner probably won't get much support from old baseball observers in his implication in the New Yorker piece that Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis and John McGraw didn't do right by Douglas.

Titled "The Crime of Shufflin' Phil Douglas," the Lardner article tells an interesting and detailed story of how and why Douglas was barred from baseball forever by Commissioner Landis. It's interesting reading, well documented baseball history. But through the piece runs the suggestion that Landis was too severe, and that Douglas should have been forgiven and granted another chance to go on his dipsomaniacal way.

McGraw did everything a manager could do to try to keep Douglas in condition to earn a living as a pitcher. He hired detectives to keep Phil out of saloons and even engaged Jess Burkett as roommate and companion to try to keep him sober.

Despite all his watching, Douglas disappeared time and again. On his last binge before his big trouble, he was found unconscious from liquor in a room a few blocks from the ball park.

Irked by McGraw's detectives and verbal castigation from the Giants' manager, Douglas wrote a letter to Leslie Mann, a member of the Cardinals, then the Giants' only rivals in the pennant race. Douglas said that if he stayed with the Giants, he would win the pennant for McGraw. He didn't want McGraw to win, and if the Cardinals would "send the goods to my house," Douglas would quit the Giants and go fishing.

Did the fact that Douglas was a chronic drunkard make it less of a crime for Douglas to offer to sell out his ball club? What could Landis do, with baseball still in the shadow of the Black Sox scandal?

Lardner makes much of the point that Landis acted as prosecutor, judge and jury. But that's what he was there for. That's the way baseball is run, to keep it clean. And any player of today who offered to sell out his ball club would get the same short shrift.

If Cardinals Win, They Will Be a Lane Ball Club.

IF Frank Lane was eager to make St. Louis baseball fans Cardinal-conscious and fully aware of Frank Lane, that objective certainly has been achieved. But he also has armed the customers with a lot of ammunition for blasts if the ball club takes a nosedive from its pleasing high position in the pennant race.

It still appears to the average fan that Lane has given up more than he has received in the series of trades and the only conclusion is that Lane had what he considered good grounds for believing that the departing key Cardinals in the trades were not as good as the fans believed they were.

There may be an occasional good game by Stu Miller and Luis Arroyo and timely pinch-hits by Solly Hemus. But the two Cardinals the fans didn't like to see depart were Harvey Haddix and Bill Virdon.

It must be that Lane, Fred Hutchinson and other professional observers in the Cardinal camp were convinced that Haddix had developed some defect that couldn't be repaired.

And it must be, as suggested by Bob Broeg in his report of the Virdon trade, that the Cardinals were convinced Bill was suffering from progressive deterioration of his vision.

It is told now that the Yankees didn't hesitate to part with Virdon in the Enos Slaughter deal because Bill was suffering from astigmatism. Apparently the Cardinals were keeping tab on Virdon's batting, which started to decline last summer. He batted .337 in the first 61 games of 1955, and only .240 in the remaining 84 contests. Also it had been noted that Virdon was being treated as enemy pitchers treated George Watkins, Cardinal outfielder, after his brilliant .373 season with the club in 1930. In 1931 the pitchers learned to feed Watkins nothing but soft stuff and he slumped to .288 and never had another good season.

U.C.L.A. DRAWS $95,000 'FINE'

On Probation Three Years; Refused to Permit Inquiry

VICTORIA, B.C., May 19 (AP)—The University of California at Los Angeles was placed on probation for three years today by the Pacific Coast Conference and "fined" approximately $95,000.

A direct fine of $15,000 was given U.C.L.A. for refusing to give the conference commissioner "the opportunity to conduct an investigation of financial aid given to athletes."

The rest of the assessment is the estimated $78,000 or more the university will lose in Rose Bowl receipts during its probationary period.

In what may be the most severe punishment ever handed a major college, the conference went beyond the penalty it handed May 5-6 to the University of Washington at an emergency session.

Washington was placed on probation for two years, got no direct fine but will lose approximately $52,000 in Rose Bowl receipts.

The probation against U.C.L.A. applies to all sports, as it did in the case of Washington.

The U.C.L.A. football team can't play in the Rose Bowl and the school's teams will not be eligible for a conference title in any sport. It cannot take part in any event sponsored by the National Collegiate Athletic Association — which pertains to post-season athletic events and nationally-televised football games.

In addition, the conference revoked the right of U.C.L.A. alumni to transport prospective athletes to the campus. This is a permitted practice throughout the conference but was not revoked in the Washington case.

The case against U.C.L.A. accused the school of failure to co-operate with the commissioner and with giving unsatisfactory explanations when queried about reports of irregularities.

It said the school "has not denied" that members of the athletic staff had co-operated with booster clubs suspected of activities in violation of conference regulations.

The probationary period for both schools starts next Aug. 1. Washington's exile ends in July, 1958. U.C.L.A. will be on the sidelines until July 1, 1959—or longer.

The penalty contains a provision that the probation will continue until "satisfactory evidence and assurances are supplied to the conference by U.C.L.A., from which it shall appear that the athletic program . . . is and will continue to be operated upon a sound basis in strict accordance with conference rules."

Lopez Raps Fans for Booing Injured Rosen

CLEVELAND, O., May 19 (UP)—Manager Al Lopez of the Cleveland Indians blasted home-town fans today for booing and jeering Third-Baseman Al Rosen while he lay injured in last night's game with Washington.

"That's when I really saw red," said Lopez. "Here's a guy who tries to block a runner and stop a ball at the same time in an effort to save the game."

Rosen was injured in a collision with Pete Runnels of Washington at third base. The Tribe third baseman was expected to be out of the lineup for some time with injuries to the ankle and knee.

"Some of those jerks jeered him when he's lying on the ground," Lopez said. "They don't deserve to be called fans."

"Well, I asked for it," the manager said. "I remember the time I said I wanted to be a manager—when baseball was fun."

Handball Grand Slam by Jacobs

NEW YORK, May 19 (AP)—Jim Jacobs, a U.C.L.A. student representing the Los Angeles A.C., won his third national handball title of the year today by defeating John Sloan of the Town Club of Chicago, 21-14, 21-17, in the finals of the National Senior A.A.U. four-wall championships.

Jacobs, 25, earlier won the National Y.M.C.A. and national U.S. Handball Association championships. It is the first time anyone has won all three major competitions in a single year.

The doubles title went to Sloan and a Town Club teammate, Phil Collins, in an upset over John Abbott and Joe Ingrassia of the host New York A.C., 21-4, 21-7. Abbott and Ingrassia had been A.A.U. doubles champions the last three years.

red bird notes

PHILADELPHIA, May 19. TOM POHOLSKY, the Cardinals' sharpest starting pitcher so far with a 3-1 record, and Dick Littlefield, the former Brownie left-hander who had no decisions this season with Pittsburgh, will be the Redbirds' hurlers Sunday in a doubleheader with the New York Giants at the Polo Grounds.

General Manager Frank Lane, who joined the Cards last night to stay with them until their return to St. Louis to play the Cubs next Friday, smiled at the obvious question. "No," he said, "there are no trades in sight."

The sore arm that sidelined Red Schoendienst wasn't regarded as disturbing. It resulted, the second base star said, from the strong cold wind that blew off Newark Bay at Jersey City Wednesday night.

The Phillies' Willie Jones was kept idle by a twisted right knee suffered in Friday night's game when he collaborated with Stan Popata to pick Bobby Del Greco off third base. Puddinhead limped to the park this afternoon, so Solly Hemus played third for the Phillies.

"If he's really got it again, we could have three of the best pitchers in the league," said Manager Mayo Smith of the Phillies, referring to Curt Simmons's impressive three-hit victory over the Cardinals Friday night. Smith referred also to his right-handed ace, Robin Roberts, and former Redbird Harvey Haddix.

Double Header Victory For College Pitcher

PROVIDENCE, R.I., May 19 (AP)—Bob Ritacco, sophomore righthander, pitched Providence College to a double victory over Boston College today on a pair of three-hitters, 4-0 and 12-2. Each game went seven innings.

M'DANIEL IS VICTOR THIRD TIME; 3 HITS FOR MUSIAL

By Bob Broeg
Of the Post-Dispatch Staff.

PHILADELPHIA, May 19 — Lindy McDaniel, a polite kid, today came to the assistance of a man twice his age, but don't be surprised if his elders soon will be forced to wait on the Cardinals' bright young bonus rookie of the mound.

With Redbird starting pitching uncertain — even Murry Dickson couldn't hold up or hold on with a big lead this mild afternoon—the 20-year-old McDaniel once again projected himself into the forefront as a potential front-line hurler, and probably soon rather than later.

Relieving a wobbling 40-year-old Dickson in the fourth inning with runners in scoring position and none out, the rawboned Oklahoma farm boy handcuffed the Phillies the final six frames on three hits. And Fred Hutchinson's Cardinals, who had appeared hard-pressed to win even with their most robust attack of the month-old season, finally breezed to an 11-5 victory.

The Redbirds pounded out 18 hits, equalling the National League high this season, and six came during a big first inning in which the Cards combed soft-throwing Saul Rogovin and former teammate Ben Flowers for five runs. The flash attack included two singles, a double, a triple and back-to-back homers by Wally Moon and Rip Repulski.

Repulski Regains Batting Lead

In the rugged Redbird outburst that dismayed a Ladies and Children's day crowd of 24,779, Repulski, who had been cooled off by the Phillies, regained the National League batting lead from teammate Ken Boyer by rapping four hits and driving across three runs. The Ripper now is hitting .429 to .396 for Boyer, who singled once in five trips.

Significantly in the offensive showing against six Philadelphia pitchers, Stan Musial, breaking out of a slump, collected as many hits in one game —three—as he'd had in the eight most recent contests. And Musial, like Repulski, knocked in three runs.

Except for Dickson, who blew one of the easiest victories of his long and able career, all Cardinals hit safely, including McDaniel, who doubled once. In fact, only Lindy, Boyer and Grady Hatton, filling in at second base for sore-armed Red Schoendienst, were limited to one hit apiece. Bill Sarni swung one of the most productive bats with a double and triple.

Most important, however, was McDaniel's pitching. The $50,000 bonus boy had been figured originally as the eleventh hurler on a 10-man staff. But with his poise, control, sinking fast ball and curve, Lindy quickly has revised that estimate.

Not only has he achieved three victories in relief, tying Tom Poholsky for the individual high among the club's pitchers, but he has stamped himself as starting timber by such performances as a five-inning two-hit effort against Milwaukee; last Wednesday's four-frame, one-single effort against Brooklyn and this afternoon's six-inning blanket thrown over the Phillies.

Five Quick Tallies.

Clinching another series in the interesting National League race, the Cardinals kayoed Rogovin quickly. Don Blasingame opened with a double over third. One out later Musial singled him across and after Boyer fanned, Moon walloped his fourth homer and Repulski his fifth.

Flowers, taking over, was touched for a single by Bobby Del Greco and a triple by Sarni. And Flowers followed Rogovin to the showers in the second, a result of two runs on a walk and singles by Hatton and Musial before Boyer bounced into a double play.

Off Jim Owens, the Cards scored two more in the fourth on Blasingame's safe bunt, a wild pitch, Roy Smalley's error, Musial's sacrifice fly and hit-and-run singles by Moon and Repulski.

The Redbirds teed off on Ron Negray for their final two tallies in the sixth as Musial doubled and Boyer, Repulski and Del Greco singled.

Philadelphia, meanwhile, got to Dickson for two runs in the first as pesky Richie Ashburn, reaching base his first of four times, singled and Del Ennis delivered his fourth circuit drive.

Murry shrugged off an inning-opening single by Ted Kazanski in the second, but permitted the Phillies to sandwich a single by Marv Blaylock between two walks for a run in the third. And Hutchinson wigwagged for McDaniel in the fourth after three straight Philadelphia hits included singles by Smalley and Pinch-Hitter Joe Lonnett, plus Ashburn's double off the right-field wall.

Strong-Armed Job.

With men on second and third, none down, Lindy permitted only one run to score as he strong-armed through the heart of the Phillies' batting order. Thereafter singles by pinch-hitters Harvey Haddix and Frankie Baumholtz, and a wasted leadoff triple in the ninth by Blaylock, were the only Philadelphia blows.

Kid McDaniel walked just two men and struck out four. It won't be long before Dickson and the other veterans will be caddying for the bonus boy, who until now has carried them in relief.

Burdette Cuts Down Giants; Turley Gains First Victory of Year

Newcombe Defeated By Redlegs

NEW YORK, May 19 (AP)—Herb Score of the Cleveland Indians struck out 15 Senators in a 5-1 victory over Washington today, but the Tribe failed to gain on the Yankees, who retained a two and a half-game lead in the American League by downing the Chicago White Sox, 6 to 4.

Among the "have-nots" of the circuit, the Baltimore Orioles edged the Detroit Tigers, 5-4, and the Kansas City A's turned back the Boston Red Sox, also by 5-4. The results pulled the A's into seventh-place tie with the Tigers.

The battery of Lew Burdette and Del Crandall carried the Milwaukee Braves to a 3-2 victory over the New York Giants in the National League, a decision which kept the Braves in first place with a .684 percentage to the second-place Cardinals' .630.

The Dodgers, meanwhile, fell before the Redlegs, 10-5, and the surprising Pittsburgh Pirates, rolling along in fifth place, just three games off the pace, slugged the hapless Chicago Cubs, 7-4.

Two Homers for Crandall.

Burdette held the Giants to four hits and catcher, Crandell, hit two home runs. The Giants scored both their runs in the ninth.

Joe Frazier, Johnny Temple and Smokey Burgess all hit home runs to lead a 14-hit Redleg assault against Brooklyn. Don Newcombe was the victim of most of the blasting and was tagged with the loss. Reliefer Hershell Freeman saved the game for Johnny Klippstein.

The Pirate Bates played a steady tune against the Cubs, too, the Buccos collecting 13 hits. Lee Walls and Dale Long each hit a two-run homer. Sam Jones, who pitched a no-hitter against the Pirates last year, was the loser." Ex-Cardinal Bill Virdon had two doubles for the Pirates.

Bob Turley scored his first victory of the season for the Yanks, although he needed help from Tom Morgan in the seventh when the White Sox suddenly came alive. Veteran Howie Pollet, making his first American League start, lasted less than three innings. It marked the fifth time this young season that the Yanks have defeated the White Sox.

After the game, Pollet was released unconditionally by the White Sox.

Three Short of Record.

Score fell just short of Bob Feller's all-time modern major league record for strikeouts in one game—18. He allowed only two hits, one of which was a home run by Roy Sievers in the ninth. The Tribe, for its part, got only two hits off four Washington pitchers, but took advantage of 11 bases on balls and two hit batsmen.

The Orioles overcame a 3-0 deficit to whip the Tigers, mostly because the Bengals made three errors. Ray Moore tossed five hitless innings in relief for the Orioles to gain the victory.

Hector Lopez saved the A's from another loss when he hit a home run with one on and one out in the ninth off Bob Porterfield.

Bradley Beats Bears in Track

Shoot Man in Second Victory At Fairmount

The leading jockey and one of the top trainers of the meeting combined talents in producing the winner of the sixth and feature race at Fairmount last night when Shoot Man won the six-furlong event.

Shoot Man gave Jake Colclasure his 24th win as they moved to the rail and won by a neck over Law Shifter, the 2 to 1 favorite. E. A. Cole is the trainer.

The time of 1:12 3/5 on a good track was a fine performance by Shoot Man in its second successive victory. Shoot Man paid $11.80, $4.60 and $3.20 across the board. The gelding won a previous race May 8.

Remodeled in the first race, and Fleet Raider in the second race, returned a daily double payoff of $137.40.

Colclasure made it 25 wins in the seventh race when he won with Bevsboy.

Three Minor League Clubs Are Disbanded

Three minor-league clubs, two in one league, went out of business and others were in trouble, news dispatches reported Saturday.

The Class D Pony League, long one of the strongest in the lower minors, was reduced to six teams when charter members Hamilton, Ont., and Bradford, Pa., were unable to continue in the face of heavy financial loss.

The New Iberia, La. club abandoned the remainder of its 1956 schedule in the Class C Evangeline League because of poor attendance (400 per game).

In the Class B Big State League a Chamber of Commerce baseball committee assumed payroll obligations and took over operation of the Port Arthur team. Its owner, Jack O'Connor, suffered a heart attack and was ordered out of baseball by his physicians.

Al Barillari was brought from New Iberia to take over general manager and field manager jobs at Port Arthur.

Pampa and Roswell, N.M., franchises are in financial troubles in the Class B Southwestern League. Roswell has been taken over as a community project; Pampa must raise $10,000 by June 1 or cease operation.

The Jacksonville, Fla., Journal said the South Atlantic League club has lost $35,144 in the past three years while winning two pennants and finishing second. If a recent move to again prohibit beer sales at that park succeeds, it may put a greater financial burden on the club than stockholders are willing to bear, the newspaper said.

Calumet Entry Runs Dead Heat In Acorn Stakes

NEW YORK, May 19 (UP)—Calumet Farm's favored entry of Beyond and Princess Turia staged a dramatic dead-heat for first place today in the $29,650 Acorn Stakes at Belmont Park—one of the East's top features for three-year-old fillies.

Beyond, ridden by Conn McCreary, made the dead heat by flashing up from fifth place to collar Princess Turia at the wire.

The two stars under the devil's-red-and-blue silks were two lengths ahead of third-place Levee, with fourth-place Dotted Line, rank outsider in the field of 11, another two lengths astern. The winning pair had a good clocking of 1:37 4-5 for the mile over a fast track and paid $5.30, $5.00 and $3.20 across the board. Levee returned $4.00 for third.

Princess Turia, ridden by Hank Moreno, had taken the lead at the head of the stretch when Pro Bono of the second-choice Phipps entry, which had been setting the pace, ran out of gas. Levee, two lengths behind at that point, never got closer but Beyond did.

Bears' Nine Trims Bradley, Ends Season

Washington University's baseball season ended on a happy note with the Bruins scoring a 12-11 victory over the Bradley U. Braves, the Missouri Valley Conference's NCAA representative, in a game played yesterday on Concordia Seminary's diamond. Game site was switched when the home grounds, Liggett Field, were too wet for play.

The Bruins of Coach Irv Utz, who were 11-6 victims of Bradley in a Friday encounter, came through with two five-run scoring sprees. Don Kettelkamp, left fielder who had a pre-game .389 batting average, hit a four-run homer in the first inning after Bob Ladd had doubled to bring in a tally.

Four hits, including a triple by Nick Ollinger; two walks and a sacrifice produced the five runs in the seventh inning.

The Bears finished their baseball campaign with a 16-6 record.

Fabius, under stout restraint while within striking distance of the leaders, wrested command midway of the final turn, increased his advantage to the furlong pole and was under energetic urging while holding Needles safe. The latter, unhurried while trailing for more than seven furlongs, moved between horses while commencing his rally, was then sent outside and was unable to get to the winner. No Regrets held a favorable position from the outset, became a more definite threat when roused nearing the stretch, then was not good enough in the drive. Golf Ace faltered through the stretch after having moved to the leader. Count Chic failed to reach serious contention. Eiffel Blue set the pace under rating for approximately six furlongs and faltered badly. Come On Red failed to enter contention. Ratheram and Fleet Feet were outrun.

Bo Wininger Retains Lead In K.C. Open

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 19 (UP)—Bo Wininger whipped a case of jitters and Milburn's 6545-yard layout today to turn in a two-under-par 70 to retain the lead in the $22,000 Kansas City Open at the 54-hole mark with a 203 total.

Wininger went one over par on the 190-yard third hole for a bogie four. Then he settled down to play steady golf, picking up three birdies. His previous rounds were 64 and 69 in this 72-hole affair ending tomorrow.

Dow Finsterwald, 26-year-old pro from Bedford Heights, Ohio, moved up to within two strokes of the leading Wininger, who was four blows ahead at the start of the round.

Finsterwald made the trip in 68, 68, four under par to go with his 68 and 69 for a 205 total. The tiny shotmaker, who took the St. Louis Open last Sunday, had an eagle three on the 490-yard seventeenth hole. Aided by a stiff northerly breeze, he reached the green with two terrific wood shots and dropped a 12-footer.

Three other veterans of the tournament circuit also advanced on the leader with 206 totals. They were Bob Rosburg, San Francisco; Fred Hawkins, El Paso, Tex.; and Wally Ulrich, Rochester, Minn., the winner here in 1954. Ulrich had 67, five under par, for the day's lowest round. Hawkins and Rosburg shot 69.

Next was Stan Leonard, Leshute, Canada, and Ted Kroll, Fort Lauderdale, Fla., with 207 totals. Leonard produced a 67 to match Ulrich's hot tour and Kroll scored 70.

Master's champion Jackie Burke, Kiamesha Lake, N.Y., and three other veterans were bunched with 208's at the three-quarter point. PGA titlist, Doug Ford, Mahopac, N.Y., fired 68 today while Arnold Palmer, Latrobe, Pa., and Al Balding, Erindale, Canada, had 71s.

Sumner's Gregory Near U.S. Prep Record With 4:21 Mile

BETWEEN ROUNDS

by W. J. McGoogan

Robinson Securely on Top of Middleweights.

RAY ROBINSON made his comeback as middleweight champion secure when he flattened Carl (Bobo) Olson in the fourth round of their bout in Los Angeles. And for Olson it meant his finish as a top ranking middleweight.

If Olson's financial affairs are in such shape that he must continue in the ring, or thinks he must, then he'll have to scrap for ham and eggs. That is usually the course which leads to a movie showing a broken down fighter struggling to make ends meet and talking through his ears.

Far better for Olson if he forgets the whole thing and turns his attention to something other than boxing to earn a livelihood.

Robinson said he would like his first defense of the 160-pound crown to be against Carmen Basilio, former welterweight champion.

That's an odd statement because the middleweight ranks contain several boys who should have a chance against Robinson before Basilio. How about Ralph (Tiger) Jones who handed Robinson his only defeat on the comeback trail and, many think, could have made things much tough for Robinson in Chicago had he cared to do so?

Jones has lost several bouts, that's true, but he's fought nothing but the toughest and it would seem that he is entitled to a crack at Robinson.

Then there is Bobby Boyd, Chicago, and Eduardo Lausse of Argentina, Charley Humez of France, and Rocky Castellani, Cleveland, who lost a decision to Robinson but had Ray on the deck for one of the few times in his life.

Misplaced Priority.

ALL of these boys, it would seem, rate a chance ahead of Basilio who has a prior engagement with the man who defeated him for the 147-pound championship, Johnny Saxton.

A Robinson-Basilio contest had been on the bill for the summer, if both held championships, and it was figured to be the fight of the year. But Basilio fell by the wayside, even though it was by a highly unpopular decision. And he would better continue with men in his own class rather than take on Robinson, who has demonstrated punching power remains in both hands in his last two bouts with Olson.

Robinson boxed Olson cagily Friday night, as he did in their previous meeting, and when the opportunity came he lashed out with his left hand and deposited Olson on the floor. Ray was so sure of the punch that he turned his back and walked away before the referee started his count.

Olson's decline in the past year has been quicker than his rise. At this time in 1955, you'll remember, he had just been matched with Archie Moore for the light heavyweight title and there was even talk of a possible meeting between Olson and Rocky Marciano for the heavyweight crown.

Moore smashed all that when he knocked out Olson in the third round and Olson has never been the same since. He won a sluggish match from Jimmy Martinez, then won a disputed decision from Joey Giambra. After that came his first knockout at the hands of Robinson and now the latest one.

It's strange what one knockout can do to a man but it frequently follows when a boxer is riding high, supremely confident of himself, as Olson was, after his truly great victories over Randy Turpin and Kid Gavilan, that he goes to pieces after being kayoed.

Troubles for Both.

BOTH Robinson and Olson were working under difficulties in Los Angeles. Although they attracted a crowd of 20,083 and a record California "gate" of $228,500, plus $100,000 for television and radio, each realized little.

Robinson was plastered with a lien by the Internal Revenue Department which announced it would take $25,000 as a down payment on the $89,981.91 it says Robinson owes. Olson's wife filed a suit against Bobo to tie up his finances until their affairs are straightened out.

It was announced from ringside that Robinson now has four or five managers, trainers, secretaries, barbers and what have you in his retinue. But it seems that what Ray needs more than anything else is a competent accountant or he might find himself in the same fix as Louis, who is said to be so far back in income tax payments that he can't possibly get out for the rest of his life.

Two middleweights are featured in the Friday night bout on KSD-TV this week, too. Fullmer and Humez are scheduled for a 10-round contest at Madison Square Garden that night, while on Wednesday two heavyweights, Johnny Summerlin, Detroit, and Harold Carter, New Jersey, are scheduled for 10 rounds at Detroit in a national TV show, here on KTVI, channel 36 unless baseball is telecast.

NEW YORK, May 19 (UP)—Ramon Monzant, New York Giant right-hander who has been nursing a sore arm, has an infected tooth which probably will be pulled soon.

Team Title Goes to W. Tech

By Harold Tuthill
Of the Post-Dispatch Staff.

COLUMBIA, Mo., May 19—Ron Gregory of St. Louis Sumner today ran a 4:21 mile in the state high school Class A track championships, an effort that was reportedly the best prep race at that distance in the United States this spring.

Gregory's performance was a feature in the state meet, which was dominated by St. Louis's all-Negro high schools—Washington Tech, which won the meet, Sumner and Vashon.

The Sumner runner also captured the half-mile race and narrowly missed carrying his school to the top of the final point standings. Except for a disqualification in the half-mile relay, the Bulldogs might have won the fifty-fourth annual carnival.

Washington Tech, however, finished on top with 32¼ points to 30 for runner-up Sumner and 23¾ for Vashon.

Double for Wilkes

St. Louis U. High, helped by Jerry Wilkes' firsts in the shotput and discus throw, was fourth with 21 points.

University City, a perennial contender, tied for sixth behind Kansas City Bishop Hogan as the Indians tallied 14 points to 17 for Bishop Hogan. Two other Kansas City teams, Northeast and Southeast had 14 points and the rest of the field was strung out. Webster Groves had 11 points, Beaumont 7, Ladue 5, Kirkwood 5, St. Mary's 3, McBride 2¾ and Roosevelt 2 in the St. Louis accounting.

Gregory, little Don Herd of Washington Tech and Wilkes of St. Louis U. high were double winners and all set records among the five new marks. Two records were tied.

Gregory, who is 18 and will graduate from Sumner, next January, was clocked under the best mile reported in the United States—4:22.8 by a schoolboy named Neal from Fullerton, Calif.

Running Ron, in capturing his specialty today, thus became one of the few athletes ever to win a state crown three straight times. He won last year in 4:28.3 which broke the old mark, and today, racing under a bright sun and a track made good by last night's showers, his 4:21.0 qualified him for a spot somewhere near the top of the best in the country.

The national interscholastic record is 4:19.5, a mark which Gregory could lower in either Friday's field day at the Public Schools Stadium or at the junior Olympic meet the following week.

Gregory's time in the half-mile was a respectable 2:07.0.

Herd Leads Lions.

Don Herd was the key man in the triumph by Otis Finley's Golden Lions who might have won the recent state indoor meet, too, had they been entered. Herd, who captured the quarter-mile, his favorite, in a record breaking 49.1, after tying the old mark, 49.4, last year, also won the 100-yard dash in 10.1 seconds.

The Tech mile relay team of Lionel Spearman, Sherrel McKinney, Jehoda Gaines and Herd, cut deeply into the old record. Their 3:24.4 not only bettered the 3:30.6 by Springfield Central in 1950, but also enabled the Lions to tie the fourth best prep mark in the nation this season. The fifth place team in the mile relay today tied the old mark, the others all broke it.

Attracting national attention, too, was Wilkes' shotput mark in Friday's preliminaries. The husky Junior Billiken, who has been known to practice as many as 40 hard puts daily, threw the 12-pound iron ball 59 feet 3⅛ inches, breaking the state record by almost five feet and putting Wilkes within striking distance of the United States interscholastic record, 62 feet 5¼ inches.

Wilkes won the discus throw with an effort which went 147 feet 3½ inches.

Broad Jump Mark.

The fifth record to fall came in the broad jump where Vashon's William Sanders leaped 23 feet 6½ inches. The former record, 22 feet, 9¾ inches, was held by Chuck Lohr of Clayton and set in 1946.

Records tied included the high jump at 6-3 by Jim Hoffman of Kansas City Northeast and the high hurdles at 14.7 by Vashon's Oscar Pullian in Friday's trials.

Pullian had bad racing luck in the finals. He hit the next-to-last hurdle so hard he spilled onto the track and failed to finish. The event was won by Bill Appleton of Kansas City Central in 14.8.

Vashon could have used Pullian's eight points for winning a race he was leading handily, just as Sumner could have won the meet but for its disqualification in the 880-yard relay. The second Bulldog on the second turn, Eugene Stafford, was accused of crowding a Springfield Central runner off the track. University City's quartet was awarded first place in the event.

Boyer and Repulski One-Two in N.L. Batting Race, Moon Fifth

Ken Tops In R.B.I.s And Runs

NEW YORK, May 19 (AP)—Birdie Tebbetts of the Cincinnati Redlegs is one of the major leagues' more astute managers. He's also a pretty good judge of talent.

It was in the Polo Grounds one summer night two years ago that he looked up from the dugout while the Reds were taking batting practice and commented, "Just watch this Ed Bailey. He's a comer. Look at him stroke the ball to all fields."

Bailey had hit only .243 for Tulsa of the Texas League the previous season, so Tebbetts' optimism seemingly was unwarranted.

This year Bailey has come into his own. The 25-year-old catcher is batting .400, good for third place in the National League batting race. And he's within striking distance of St. Louis' Ken Boyer, the leader at .406 and Rip Repulski of the Cards, the runnerup at .403, through games of Friday, May 18.

Boyer enjoyed a productive week with 12 hits in 29 at bats. He walloped four homers to increase his total to nine. Wally Post of Cincinnati is setting the pace with 10. Boyer also took over the runs batted in lead with 27. He had nine last week. And he is the league leader in runs scored with 23. The fast pace of these three young men has helped boost the Cardinals into the top position in team batting.

Repulski slumped 19 points as a result of 10 hits in 27 trips (a .370 pace). Dale Long of Pittsburgh moved up three notches to fourth place at .388 while Wally Moon of St. Louis remained in fifth at .375.

In the American League, Mickey Mantle of the New York Yankees continued his sensational batting feats. He's the circuit's top batter with .409, its home run leader with 15 and Mickey is one behind teammate Yogi Berra in the runs batted in competition. Yogi has 33 and Mantle 32.

Charley Maxwell of Detroit, despite a nine point drop to .368, moved from third place to second in batting. He's followed by Bob Boyd of Baltimore with .362 and Berra with .357. The records include Friday's games.

Brooks Lawrence of Cincinnati downed Brooklyn 7-6 Friday night to maintain the best won-lost record in the National League. He's 5-0. Whitey Ford of the Yankees is tops in the American with six victories against no defeats.

Missouri Wallops Nebraska Nine, 27-4

LINCOLN, Neb., May 19 (AP) Missouri's Tigers, who dropped a 10-7 baseball decision to Nebraska yesterday, came back today to wallop the Huskers 27-4 for an even split of the two-day Big Seven Conference series.

Missouri nicked five Nebraska pitchers for 19 hits and 18 walks and got the additional assistance of six Nebraska errors.

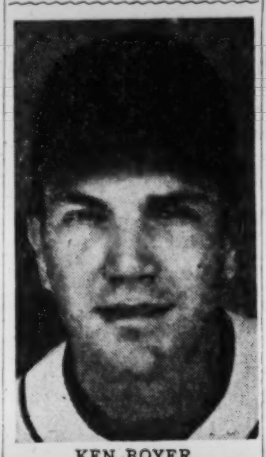

The win gave Missouri a conference record of 8 wins, 3 losses. Nebraska's loop record stands at 6-4.

John Cotter, Missouri catcher, smacked a 360-footer over the left field fence in the first inning with two men aboard.

Vigus Favored At Creve Coeur

Manager Leroy Hankins's Vigus team, which shares first place with Twin City Reds in the County League's tough American division, will face a victory-starved Creve Coeur team at the latter's home ground today at 2:30.

Creve Coeur, usually a league power, and division champion in 1955, has dropped all three of its starts, to Manchester, 7-1; Ballwin, 4-0, and Twin City, 17-7.

Vigus has a 3-1 record, as does Twin City, also on the road today, at Olivette (1-2).

MARV STENDEL, AWOL FROM PRO BALL, RETURNS AS A MUNY LEAGUER TODAY

By Neal Russo

A Louisville Slugger, the live kind, and a brand-new senior league will make their first start of the season today in Muny baseball.

The man from Louisville's American Association club is Marv Stendel, who will play center field and bat cleanup for Kutis North in the 3:30 North Side League game with Union Printers at Sherman Park No. 1.

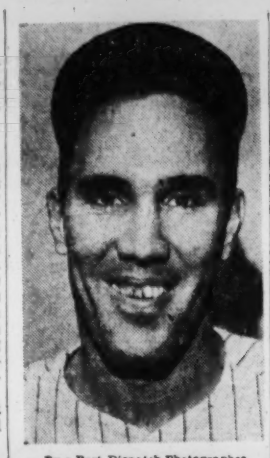

The new senior loop is the Lemay League, which opens its season at the new Titanium Field, Broadway and Horn, with Broadway Merchants opposing Titanium at 12:30 and the Jokers meeting Army Medical Optical at 3:30.

In the 1 o'clock contest at Sherman, Borbein-Young will play Polish Falcons.

Villa Seeks Third Victory.

At Heine Meine Park, the Villa A.C., winners of thrillers in their first two games, will oppose Hoffmeisters (1-1) in the Meine League feature at 3:15. Carondelet No. 2 (1-1) takes on Simpkins (0-2) at 12:45.

Carondelet Sunday Morning No. 1, the defending Muny titleholder, faces Gravois at 1 o'clock at Carondelet Diamond No. 2, where the second South Side League contest matches Kutis South and Kimacks.

MARV STENDEL

In the only Berkeley League game, Overland Braves play Carter at 2:30.

Stendel, a Roosevelt High and University of Arkansas product, started the 1956 season with the Louisville Colonels, but balked at going to Class A after getting in only four at-bats. Last season he hit .317 at Louisville in 73 games, as the first outfielder behind Don Lenhardt, bonus-baby Marty Keough and Bob Broome.

A shoulder separation in the first inning of the second game of the 1953 season at Louisville hurt Stendel's chances of earning promotion to the majors. Besides being a powerful right-handed hitter who could have fit in well with the chummy right-field wall at Fenway Park, Stendel had a very strong throwing arm.

Helps Baumann's Game.

Fellow St. Louisan Frankie Baumann was on the mound for Louisville that day. With two out in that first inning and none on, Stendel made a diving catch of a blooper, landing on his elbow.

"With Baumann throwing BBs that day, I could have let the ball go for a double or a triple and they wouldn't have scored," Stendel said.

A member of the old Zollers in 1948-49, Stendel hit some of the longest drives ever whacked at Fairground No. 1. On one of his pokes the ball disappeared over the clubhouse.

Flanking Stendel today will be Vern Stout in left and John Geringer or Elmer Roberts in right. Righthanders Charley Galati (Kutis) and Bob Kalinowski or Dutch Ries (Printers) will start on the mound. Ace Isringhaus will catch for Kutis.

Drury to Play Buchholz in Tennis Meet

Neil Drury and Earl (Butch) Buchholz, a pair of outstanding junior stars, will meet in the feature men's semifinal singles match in the revived Clayton Open invitational tennis tournament today at 9 a.m. on the Shaw Park courts. Rich Waltke and Bob Ziervogel, two veteran players, clash in the other semifinal at the same time. The final takes place at 1:30 p.m.

The Clayton Open was last held in 1948 with the men's singles title being won by Frank Thompson.

Drury, a Country Day player, surprised the sideline fans yesterday afternoon by eliminating the No. 1 seeded Ralph Hart, 6-4, 6-8, 7-5. Buchholz, one of the country's top small boys' players and a John Burroughs student, gained a 7-5, 6-2 victory over Rodney Susman of Ladue.

Waltke, seeded No. 2, had a hard workout in beating Ben Bishop, 6-2, 2-6, 6-1. Ziervogel received a default from Dick Horwitz, another Country Day player, as the mate hentered the third set. Horwitz turned an ankle to retire.

Ward Parker and Hart, striving to repeat in the doubles they won in 1947 and 1948, meet Chuck McKinley and Susman in the semifinal. Buchholz and Drury are seeded No. 2 in the doubles.

Marilyn Mueller (No. 1 seed) and Erika Puetz (No. 2) reached the women's semifinals.

Beaumont and St. Mary's Only St. Louis Teams in State Meet, Finals Are at Cherokee Park

By John J. Archibald

St. Louis, which is accustomed to having at least half of the eight finalists in the state high school baseball tournament from the St. Louis area, will have to put its hopes on just two teams when the seventh annual meet opens Wednesday at Forest Park. Beaumont and St. Mary's were the only survivors out of five St. Louis squads that played outstate last week.

For the first time in the history of the tournament there will be a day off scheduled after the meet opens. After the four first-round games Wednesday there will be a lull Thursday because several of the competing teams have graduation exercises that day. The semifinals will be Friday at 1:30 and 3:30 p.m., and the championship game Saturday afternoon at 2:30, with play both days at Cherokee Park.

New Cardinal Policy.

This is the first time that Busch Stadium has not been used for the championship game. Under a new policy the Cardinal management will not permit any organization to use the diamond the same day that a major-league game is scheduled to be played in Busch Stadium. The Cardinals said that the state high school association would be welcome to use the field for the tournament if they could schedule it when the Redbirds are away from home.

The City of St. Louis agreed to let the state use Cherokee Park and to provide facilities for a pay gate. The infield on Diamond No. 2 has been sodded, bleachers will be brought in, and the field will be surrounded with a tarpaulin wall to keep out non-paying spectators. The admission charge for the semifinals and the final will be 50 cents.

In the opening games, to be played on adjoining diamonds across from Forest Park Highlands, these are the pairings: (Upper bracket)—St. Mary's vs. Rolla, West Plains-Doniphan winner vs. Cape Girardeau Central; (lower bracket) — Senath vs. Sedalia Smith-Cotton, Kansas City Pembroke Country Day vs. Beaumont.

The Slim St. Louis representation in the state finals comes despite the fact that the quality of prep baseball in the area is probably better than usual. One of the teams expected to be a chief contender for the championship, St. Louis U. High, was upset at Sedalia by Smith - Cotton High, but the chief reason for the decline in representatives from here is unusually bad luck in the pre-tournament drawings.

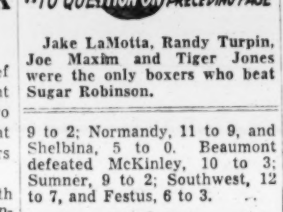

Luck of the Draw.

Such strong teams as McKinley, Normandy, Ritenour, Sumner and Webster Groves landed in the same districts as the eventual survivors, Beaumont and St. Mary's, thus were eliminated in early rounds. As a result, some of the teams that won out in weaker districts were not typical of the better clubs in the St. Louis area.

In Beaumont and St. Mary's the city has a pair of first place league teams. Beaumont wound up tied with McKinley for the Public League championship after suffering its first loss in 18 games Thursday. McKinley whipped the Bluejackets, 10 to 3, the day after Beaumont had won a tough state tournament game at Festus.

St. Mary's had a rough start, but won the Catholic Athletic Conference title with a 5-and-3 record. In over-all play, however, the Green Dragons were below .500.

In the tournament eliminations St. Mary's defeated Kinloch, 7 to 3; Washington Tech, 9 to 2; Normandy, 11 to 9, and Shelbina, 5 to 0. Beaumont defeated McKinley, 10 to 3; Sumner, 9 to 2; Southwest, 12 to 7, and Festus, 6 to 3.

Jake LaMotta, Randy Turpin, Joe Maxim and Tiger Jones were the only boxers who beat Sugar Robinson.

Piersall's Fifth Child.

BOSTON, May 19 (AP) — Boston Red Sox Outfielder Jimmy Piersall is a daddy for the fifth time. Mrs. Piersall gave birth to an eight-pound, two-ounce girl today at St. Elizabeth's Hospital. She is the Piersalls' fifth child and fourth girl.

Kansas Wins Fifth Straight Big Seven Meet; Tigers Tie for Fourth

Shot Put Goes Past 60 Feet

MANHATTAN, Kan., May 19 (AP)—Kansas' magnificent Jayhawks, scoring strongly in all but two events and providing two new meet records, today breezed to their fifth straight Big Seven Conference outdoor track and field championship on a total of 154½ points.

For the second year the Oklahoma Sooners were second, scoring 71 points.

Colorado finished third with 67 points, followed by Kansas State and Missouri with 58 each, Iowa State with 40 and Nebraska with 15½.

Five meet records were broken and another tied in the two days of competition during warm, sultry weather.

Bill Nieder, one of Kansas' several giant-sized weight stars, bettered the collegiate record for the shot put with a heave of 60 feet, 3¾ inches. The old record of 59 feet 2¼ inches was set by Parry O'Brien of Southern California in 1953. Nieder improved his own meet record of 57 feet 3⅜ inches, made last spring.

Nieder and O'Brien are the only men in history to attain 60 feet in the shot put. O'Brien holds the recognized world record of 60 feet 10 inches, made after his college days.

The other Kansan providing a record was Al Oerter, 220-pound sophomore from New York City, who threw the discus 183 feet 5 inches in the preliminaries yesterday. Bob Van Dee of Oklahoma, who set the old record of 165 feet 3 inches last year, was second at 172 feet 11 inches.

The other meet marks went to Ken Yob, Colorado senior, who threw the javelin 222 feet 10 inches in the preliminaries yesterday; Bob Lang, Missouri, 6 feet 8½ inches in the high jump, and Hal Mullison, Iowa State, 14 feet 2¾ inches in the pole vault.

Peter Orr, a Missouri sophomore, who tied the meet's 440-yard record of 47.1 seconds in the preliminaries, won the event in 47.5 today.

Kansas was shut out in only the high and low hurdles, both events in which they failed to qualify a man yesterday.

Double winners were Kansas' Dick Blair in the 100 and 200-yard dashes and Kansas State's Gene O'Connor in the 120-yard high hurdles and the 220-yard low hurdles.

Flaherty's Record Run Gets Pole Position in 500-Mile Auto Race

16 Other Cars Get Berths

INDIANAPOLIS, May 19 (UP)—Unassuming Pat Flaherty, a smiling Irishman from Chicago, roared around the Indianapolis Speedway in record time today to grab the pole position for the 500-mile Memorial Day auto race.

Flaherty, whose best previous showing in the "500" was tenth last year, was the fifth qualifier on the opening day of time trials before a crowd estimated by police at more than 100,000.

His average speed for the four-lap, 10-mile test was 145.596 miles an hour, shattering the previous mark of 142.580 by the late Jack McGrath last year.

In all, 17 low-slung racers, all driven by veterans of the nation's premier gasoline derby, qualified, leaving only 16 berths to be filled tomorrow and next weekend.

McGrath's overall speed was eclipsed 10 times and his one lap mark of 143.793 went by the boards 30 times.

Flaherty, who crashed in the 1953 and 1954 classics, also set the one-lap mark at 146.056.

Jim Rathmann, Miami, Fla., the first qualifier, hit 145.120 for runnerup honors. Pat O'Connor, North Vernon, Ind., completed the first row by averaging 144.980.

Other qualifiers in order of their speeds were:

Dick Rathmann, Trenton, N.J., 144.741; Tony Bettenhausen, Tinley Park, Ill., 144.602; 1950 winner Johnnie Parsons, Van Nuys, Calif., 144.144; Freddie Agabashian, Albany, Calif., 144.096; Paul Russo, Canago Park, Calif., 143.546; Andy Linden, Manhattan Beach, Calif., 143.056; defending "500" champion Bob Sweikert of Indianapolis, 143.033.

Troy Ruttman, Linwood, Calif., the 1952 winner, 142.484; Johnnie Boyd, Fresno, Calif., 142.337; Sam Hanks, Burbank, Calif., 142.051; Ed Elisian, Oakland, Calif., 141.382; Rodger Ward, Los Angeles, 141.171; Jimmy Daywalt, Indianapolis, 140.977, and Ray Crawford, Pasadena, Calif., 140.824.

The only disappointment for the huge crowd was failure of the publicized Novi, driven by Russo, to win the choice pole position. Apparently hampered by high winds, Russo was dagged off the course on his first attempt. His second attempt was slightly faster.

Billikens Split Double Bill With Memphis

By Jack Rice

Hopes of an at-large berth in the N.C.A.A. tournament for the St. Louis University baseball team have been stifled considerably by a sudden recollection of a rule, but Billiken baseball could stop right where it is and consider the season well done. Yesterday, in a doubleheader against Memphis Naval Air Station, the Bills won their twelfth game, a record quantity for the school.

The Billikens won the first game, 4 to 3, in 12 innings. They lost the second game, 7 to 6, in 10 innings. That amounted to three extra innings also, for the teams planned on only playing seven, after the first game went on and on.

"I came up here figuring on a little liberty," said a plaintive voice from the Navy infield in the eighth inning, "and I've been playing baseball all weekend instead."

The second-game defeat was the Billikens' sixth. Asked if he thought it did much damage to the Bills' chances for an N.C.A.A. bid, St. Louis coach Phil Dynan said he didn't think so. He added that he had thought of something else that would. In the N.C.A.A. basketball tournament, a conference represented by its champion couldn't provide an at-large entry as well. The Missouri Valley Conference will be represented in N.C.A.A baseball by its champion, Bradley.

Dynan said he probably would have a yes or no on it by tomorrow, or Tuesday. It gives him time to figure how to play his pitching staff, Bob Page, in the at-home finish of the regular season. Page has won eight of the Bills' 12 victories and hasn't been defeated.

The Billiken record season was achieved by straining. The Bills rallied for a run and a 3-3 tie in the ninth. They won in the 12th when Les Hohl hit a pop double and scored on John McCartney's single. It was the high point of a six hours-plus day that began on a muddy field, ended on a sun-dried field, and at all times between featured an assault by small green mosquitos, unripened and hungry. Nobody fell asleep on the bench.

Ask Me Another

By Harold Tuthill

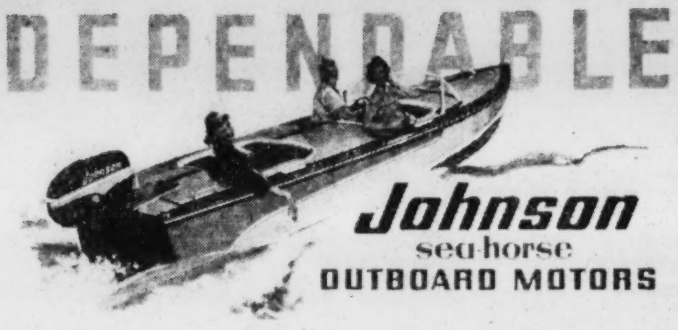

"When was the rule established that a player removed from a baseball game could not return to the lineup in the same game?" T. A.

As far as we could learn, the rule that a player substituted for may not return to the lineup is as old as baseball itself. However, it should be noted that there have been cases of courtesy runners for players temporarily disabled who were forced to take time out for minor repairs.

"Who was the heavyweight fighter who recently knocked out Don Cockell of England in less time than it took Rocky Marciano to kayo the same boxer?" Elijah Medlay, Pana, Ill.

The fighter in question is Kitione Lave. He's from Tonga, Friendly Islands, in the Pacific.

Larsen, Nettled By Crying Baby, Loses in Paris

PARIS, May 19 (AP)—Art Larsen, who has lectured tennis fans on their deportment the world over, was eliminated from the French international meet today after yelling to a young mother in the crowd "I can't play with your baby crying."

Many of the spectators replied with a French saying that translates loosely into "Go soak your head." Larsen did not accept the suggestion.

For a time it appeared the temperamental San Leandro (Calif.) player would win his match with Paul Remy, France's No. 1 star. He had taken the first and third sets while the crowd jeered and was leading, four games to none, in the fourth when Remy took charge. The Frenchman finally won the set, 7-5. The complete scores were 5-7, 6-3, 1-6, 7-5, 6-3.

Young Bob Perry of Los Angeles was beaten by Tiny Giuseppe Merlo of Italy 6-2, 6-3, 6-3. The Italian Davis Cupper, using a two-handed grip on his racket, scored consistently with placements that often left Perry flat-footed.

The other two Americans in the tournament, second-seeded Budge Patty, now a Paris resident, and eleventh - seeded Herbie Flam, Beverly Hills, Calif., didn't play singles today.

Remy and Merlo joined Lew Hoad of Australia and Nicola Pietrangeli of Italy in the quarter-final round of the men's singles. Hoad crushed Roger Becker of England, 6-1, 6-3, 6-0, while the Italian outlasted Louis Ayala of Chile 6-4, 6-1, 0-6, 5-7, 6-4.

Today was the midway point in the two-week French meet, which is one of the major preludes to the coming All-England championships at Wimbledon next month.

In women's doubles Althea Gibson of New York paired with Angela Buxton of Great Britain to trounce Elaine Launay and Mrs. Collette Mitchelberger of France, 6-2, 6-0. Gloria Butler of Los Angeles and Barbara Scofield Davidson of Milwaukee combined to down Annie Bellani and Nicola Migliori of Italy, 7-5, 6-2.

Mrs. Dorothy Head Knode of Forest Hills, N.Y., and Darlene Hard of Montebello, Calif., polished off Francoise Lemal and Annie Soisbault of France, 6-0, 6-2.

Pay Your Money and Take Your Choice

A FISHERIES biologist for the Tennessee Game and Fish Commission advises, after tests made in two big lakes in that state, that bait should be let down below the 20-foot level for best fishing in hot summer months.

On the other hand, a fisheries biologist for the Missouri Conservatoin Commission says, on the basis of a survey made in large impoundments in this state, that it is generally best to fish no deeper than 20 feet in warm weather.

The fisherman gets all kinds of advice: Fish bite better during and following rains; don't waste time fishing when it's raining; fish bite better on days of steady high barometric pressure; best catches are made when the barometer is rising; a cloudy day is preferable to one with sunshine, and vice versa.

Small wonder that many sportsmen believe fishing is 95 per cent luck and 5 per cent skill. Everyone who has used a pole and line, or rod and reel, has had the experience of catching fish at times when conditions seemed to be at their worst. Likewise, a perfect setting has often produced nothing more than a wet line.

All Wrong.

Sometimes a man will cast a paint-chipped plug or a long-dead minnow in the center of a warm lake under noon's blazing sun and hook a lunker bass. The same fellow may visit a lake teeming with fish and catching nothing, even though he offers most tempting lures in early morning or at twilight.

Records kept for 12 years on a heavily-fished and highly productive club-owned lake near Carlinville, Ill., showed that persons who fished only a few times a year had as much success as those who were out at least once or twice a week.

Bluegills and crappies seemed to hit just a bit better in the light of the moon than in the dark of the moon. Clouds or sunshine made little difference in the catch.

There was a small increase in the average creel on days when more than one-half inch of rain fell. When the water cleared two or three weeks later, bass struck almost twice as well.

Seek Aerated Water.

Some "experts" say that fish bite better when the water level is rising or stationary than when it is falling, although biologists are not certain why this is.

Many bass fishermen concentrate on the large, deep holes in streams during hot weather. Scientists who study fish say this is a mistake—that the best mid-summer catches of bass are taken from eddies around rocks, logs and root-wads.

It appears that the bass want aerated water as well as food, which they can't get as a rule in the deep holes.

However, channel catfish and jack salmon are usually found in daytime along the bottom of deep holes in streams. At night, they come into the shallow edges and riffles to feed.

Just how complicated this fishing can be, when one goes at it scientifically, is shown by a study made at Missouri's Lake of the Ozarks.

In the lower half of the lake's Niangua arm, it was found that intense stagnation occurred during July and August in the deep waters, so that the fish, lacking sufficient oxygen at the depths, stayed in the upper 15 feet of water.

In the upper half, cold fresh waters from Hahatonka spring kept the water well aerated, so that the fish remained either very deep or near the surface, avoiding a large stagnated layer in between.

The Missouri Conservation Commission suggests that fishermen can tell from their minnows if they are dropping bait in stagnated water areas.

If minnows consistently die on the hook within a short time, provided they are in good condition and not injured when hooked, it is a good sign that the bait is being held at a stagnant level.

When is fishing good? How many fish should you hook in a day or what should be the rate of catch for an angler to consider himself successful?

Minnesota, which considers itself one of the top fishing states, says a rate of one and one-half fish an hour is pretty fair hooking.

That is the average for fishermen in the state in the years when angling is at its best.

The Way It Goes.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Anthony, 2501 Madison street, had fished all day last week in a Mississippi slough near West Alton without getting a bite.

Discouraged and ready to go home, Mrs. Anthony made a half-hearted cast and anchored her rod and reel beside a tree. A few minutes later she heard the line sing and someone shout: "You've got a monster!"

Mrs. Anthony grabbed her casting outfit and worked frantically to stop the line from playing out. Soon she saw what she had hooked — a spoonbill catfish that made several leaps from the water in an effort to escape.

After 30 minutes she landed the catfish, which weighed 25 pounds and was just over 4 feet in length.

Soccer Notes

By Dent McSkimming

None in the crowd at Public Schools Stadium Friday night watched with keener interest than players of the C.Y.C. squad which is preparing for its game with Everton of England here, June 2. Bob Guelker, coach of the C.Y.C. squad, said he and his players were impressed with the baffling combination passes of Germany's Augsburg Schwaben team.

"Only fine physical conditioning enabled Kutis players to overcome that marked superiority in ball control," said Guelker. "And we of the C.Y.C. group drew our lesson from that display. We know we will face a similar situation in our match with Everton, so we have been working very hard to be fit for a long, hard, fatiguing game."

Guelker will watch with interest the outcome of the game at New York, Wednesday, May 30, when Everton opposes Augsburg Schwaben. The score there should provide a good line on what Everton may show here three days later. Everton opened its U. S. Tour with a 4-0 victory over Newark.

Meanwhile Kutis, trying to perfect its Amateur tournament team, opposes the Diamonds this afternoon in a Meramec soccer league match. They will start at 2 p.m. and later, the Jones club will oppose Jadrans.

They'd Like More Light.

Speaking of lighted play fields (the city is doing a fine job of brightening the public parks) it is a constant source of wonder that the Board of Education doesn't improve the candlepower of its Public Schools Stadium plant . . . If the people who pass on the question of lights would watch a sports attraction at the stadium at night they could not help but be impressed by the inadequacy of the illumination. . . . In short—spectators just can't follow the ball.

After the game Friday night, Coach Hans Merkle of Augsburg paid Kutis players some happy compliments . . . He said he was surprised at their all-round skill and admired their forcefulness in front of the goal . . . He felt that his team deserved a goal or two (Goalie Bob Burkard robbed the Germans of two or three).

Clouds in Olympic Picture.

The discouraging prospect that faces the United States team in the Olympic soccer tournament is illustrated in the fate of the English team in its Olympic elimination series with Bulgaria. As is generally known, the English use only bonafide amateurs, just as does the United States. But Bulgaria's squad, like that of other Central European countries, is a state-sponsored machine whose personnel is almost identical with that of the team used in the World Cup tournament, open to professionals.

In the first game of the series, at Sofia in October, the Bulgars won, 2-0. Last week, at London, England fought back valiantly for a tie score, 3-3. But that was not enough, for total goals determined the winner, Bulgaria, with a total of five goals, thus goes to Melbourne while England, with a total of three goals, stays at home.

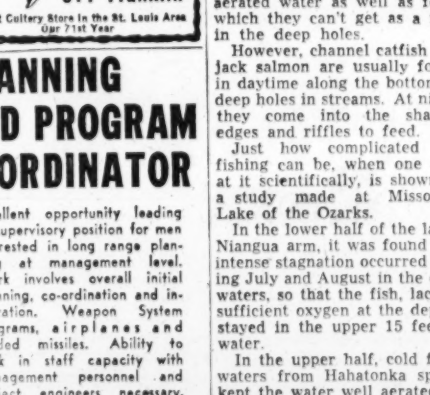

Junior Final To Be Here.

St. Louis's fine junior soccer team, St. Engelbert, can look forward to playing its national Junior Cup final at home. Harry Luecke, national cup commissioner, announced yesterday that arrangements are being made to bring the eastern division champion, as yet undetermined, to this city for the final. Philadelphia, New York and Fall River still have teams in the running for the eastern title. The final date probably would be in late June, Luecke said.

The hospital is being financed by public subscription in the Jefferson county area and by federal funds. The building, costing $750,000, is expected to be ready for use late this year, Amos Govero, chairman of the hospital building committee, reports.

STUDY OF NEW DRUGS FOR MENTAL ILLNESS

Veterans' Administration to Investigate Tranquilizing Treatment.

A large-scale co-operative investigation of the new tranquilizing drugs for mental illness is to be conducted by the Veterans' Administration, it was announced yesterday.

Dr. Lester Drubin, manager of the administration's hospital at Jefferson Barracks, said the program would be in charge of Dr. Jesse F. Casey of Washington, D.C., director of the psychiatry and neurology service of the Veterans' Administration. The research, Dr. Drubin said, will be patterned after the studies for the so-called "wonder drugs" for tuberculosis.

Value of tranquilizing drugs will be studied and then findings will be determined as to dosage required for various patients. All participating hospitals will agree on procedures in advance.

General approval of the project in principle was given at a recent meeting of representatives of 44 veterans' hospitals and seven mental hygiene clinics held at Downey, Ill.

The LAKE VACATIONLAND St.Louisans have always wanted

only 30 MINUTES FROM ST-LOUIS

Lake Lorraine

Only 30 minutes away from St. Louis a beautiful new Lake Vacationland is rapidly coming into existence.

Among the beautiful hills of Jefferson County there will soon be a 50-acre lake of clear, sparkling water, with picturesque lodges, where busy men and their families will enjoy life as they have always hoped to do.

The same men who developed Lake Montowese and Fond du Lac are building Lake Lorraine, near Goldman, Missouri, less than 26 miles south of Affton on Highway 21 (Tesson Ferry Road). One small lake is now stocked and ready for fishing.

Lodge sites vary in size from 50x150 feet and up. Modern conveniences are available. Lodge site prices start at $650, and may be bought on convenient terms.

Lake Lorraine will NOT be open to the general public. It is being developed —and will be maintained—for Lodge Site owners and their guests.

Mr. Adolph Gutman swiftly turned on the four hanging light bulbs that were never allowed to burn unless a customer was in the store, and hurried to help the farmer hitch his horses.

"Adolph," said the farmer, "I just came by to use your phone. Martha's not feeling well and I don't want to make that long hitch into St. Louis for my sister unless I know she can come. Martha also wanted me to pick up some black darning cotton."

"I'll get your thread while you make the call. The phone on the right is Kinlock; the other's the Bell", replied Mr. Gutman.

Silence . . . then the roar: "Adolph, how do you get an answer out of this !,;&! blasted thing?"

Just yesterday one of our customers was asking the same thing of Mr. Louis Gutman. What is a dried-up wrinkled prune—but a smooth, firm-skinned plum with its moisture removed!

REPLACE MOISTURIZING OILS IN YOUR SKIN WITH AMAZING Lanolin Plus LIQUID!

Unlike Other Beauty Lotions, This Exclusive Formula is Closest to Natural Skin Oils

Chemists have discovered that lubricants which give softness and pliability to the skin diminish with age. Therefore, Lanolin Plus Liquid (recommended for all women over 25) contains whole lanolin and other beneficial ingredients to counteract skin dryness. This exclusive formula refurbishes natural oils—gives skin a far more youthful look.

Do you know that your skin is robbed of its natural oils every day? Soap does it ...water, sun and wind do it. And when that moisture isn't replaced, your skin is on its way to tiny dry lines, crow's feet and wrinkles.

Replaces Natural Oils

That's why it is so necessary to give your skin regular care with this exclusive formula that replaces natural oils. Lanolin Plus Liquid is made with the heart of lanolin—whole, pure, absorbable lanolin—the scientist's first choice for complexion care because it's so close to Nature's own oils, esters and sterols. Liquefied for easy use, its penetrating action gets natural moisturizing oils down under the skin where they do the most good—softens dry, moisture-starved skin, makes it lovelier no matter how parched and dry-looking.

Works While You Sleep

The results you get overnight when you use golden Lanolin Plus Liquid are astounding. Tonight, for example, smooth on a few drops of this lanolin-specialized liquid. Then, in the morning, run your hand over your face.

Skin Dryness Gone

Not only will your skin look lovelier than ever but every trace of skin dryness will be gone. You'll be overjoyed with the clean, fresh look and feel of your skin. You'll love its soft, silky texture, its glowing color. And you'll see, too, how Lanolin Plus Liquid rewards by helping to smooth wrinkles and crow's feet which have formed because of dryness.

Get exclusive-formula Lanolin Plus Liquid today, wherever cosmetics are sold. Only $1 plus tax.

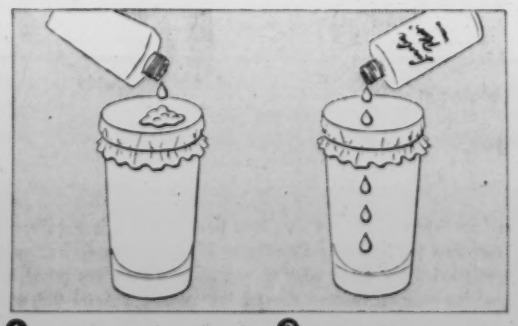

OVERNIGHT—
softer, younger-looking skin

IT'S THE PLUS IN Lanolin Plus THAT MAKES THE DIFFERENCE.

MAKE THIS EASY PENETRATION TEST

1 Pour a small quantity of your present skin lotion said to contain lanolin on a handkerchief (or a piece of cotton) stretched over a jar. Nothing happens! The lotion turns into heavy lumpy wax... stays on top... never penetrates the fabric.

2 Now pour an equal quantity of Exclusive-formula Lanolin Plus Liquid on a similar handkerchief (or a piece of cotton) stretched over a second jar. See how quickly this liquid penetrates the fiber... goes down into the jar instantly.

Proof that Exclusive-formula LANOLIN PLUS LIQUID will soak through outer layers of skin to replace natural oils down underneath where they do the most good.

ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH

NAPLES APPEALS TO A PARTICULAR TYPE OF PERSON

In the southernmost corner of Florida's Gulf Coast on the Tamiami Trail is the city of Naples, one of the fastest growing communities in Florida.

A sleepy little fishing village until after World War II, the 1950 census gave its population as 1450. By the end of 1955 the year-round population was estimated at 5000 to 6000; and it continues to climb rapidly.

At the height of the winter tourist season in February and March, the population swells to more than 10,000. A sizable percentage of these tourists "try" the town as a vacation spot, and wind up buying property and locating permanently.

Naples appeals to a definite type of people. Unlike most vacation spots, it offers nothing in the way of horse or dog tracks, gambling, lavish nightclubs, or other forms of nightlife attractions. It does offer the civic and recreation activities which draw people in most small towns together in a friendly and co-operative atmosphere. The civic clubs, Parent-Teachers Association, Players theatrical group, various art and club associations, church organizations and other congenial groups offer plenty of entertaining and worthwhile projects to keep everyone busy.

Most of the buildings, both commercial and residential, are less than five years old. Much of the beauty of the town can be traced to the far-sightedness of the citizens and a competent mayor - council - city manager form of government. Strict zoning and building ordinances, careful street planning with an eye to the future, and planting of tropical trees and foliage along the streets and parks give an assist to the natural beauty of the area.

Boom Has Not Spoiled Charm of Florida Keys

The Florida Keys, a string of coral spits stretching approximately 163 miles from Miami towards the Tropic of Cancer to Key West, the nation's southernmost point, still retain the aura of high seas adventure, despite a building boom which has added thousands of permanent residents to the Keys and dotted the area with restaurants, motels, public libraries and churches. The sparkling waters of the Gulf on one side and the Atlantic on the other recall days gone by when romantic rascals from buccaneers to bootleggers, hiding out from authorities, shook the dense mangrove growths with their revelry.

The Keys (the name results from a corruption of the Spanish word "cayo" to "cay," pronounced "key"), with what is probably the finest salt-air climate in North America, have always been blessed by a benign sun and bracing trade-winds. A few of the hardier northerners who took their fishing seriously enough to dispense with the frills were bringing back remarkable catches from the Key area as far back as the roaring twenties.

But the region really began coming into its own after World War II when all of Florida began the expansion program which has raised it from the twentieth to the fourteenth ranking state in population.

Not the least of its claims to fame are its food specialties. In fact, this section is acclaimed by many as the only place in the whole world that serves green turtle steaks the way they should be served. The Key variety of turtle—kept at several restaurants in pens at the end of piers—is enhanced first by expert butchering which removes all of the stringy sinew to tenderize the succulent meat; and secondly, by a special type of sauce made from the famous Key limes which grow wild all over the place.

And speaking of limes, the Key Westers do something with a lime pie that is simply out of this world. And this delicacy is really exclusive with the Keys, not because of any secret formulas, but simply because this type of lime doesn't grow anywhere else.

Then, for the more hardy type who wants to at least try everything, there is conch. Years ago the natives were so fond of this delicacy, that they derived their nickname from it. However, most mainlanders agree that you have to develop a taste for these sea creatures which inhabit colorful shells and frequently attain the size of young turkeys.

Conch meat is prepared in several ways. As it has a rather strong distinctive taste, it is usually recommended that the uninitiated, instead of ordering a full conch dinner, try it first prepared as a seafood cocktail or as conch chowder.

Whether the visitor to the Keys goes there to fish, eat, swim, bask in the sun, or just loaf, it's hard for him to describe the area after he's returned. Of course it's somewhat like the rest of booming South Florida, but it's different. It reminds some visitors of the Spanish Riviera, but not quite, because the area is thoroughly Americanized. Probably the best description is that the Keys are really not like anywhere else. They're different, distinctive, unique and resemble nothing else in the world except the Florida Keys.

SHENANDOAH PARK TRAILSIDE MUSEUM ON SKYLINE DRIVE

A trailside museum was opened last autumn in the Shenandoah National Park to show Skyline Drive travelers samples of the park's many hidden natural wonders.

The 300-square-mile park high in the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia long has been known for the famous Skyline Drive, the scenic highway that opens one of the East's most picturesque regions to millions of motoring Americans.

Preservation of the park's natural features is an objective of the National Park Service. The new museum has exhibits that suggest ways park visitors can enjoy the trees, animals, birds and wildflowers — yet leave them for others to enjoy.

No Crowds Here.
St. John, in the U.S. Virgin Islands, has a population of 700 and is approximately the size of Manhattan, with its population of 1,898,000.

Why thousands now take summer vacations in FLORIDA
More people now visit here in summer than used to come in winter. Here are a few things that attract them!
Two seas and brisk breezes endow Florida with wonderful weather year around. Summers, for example, average only about 8 degrees warmer than winters. Miami — the state's southernmost big city — averages only 6 days a year when the temperature reaches 90 degrees (U.S. Weather Bureau statistic average). So make this your year to escape hot, muggy spells in sea-cooled Florida.

Water, water, everywhere —Enjoy refreshing dips wherever your pleasure-hunting takes you in Florida. It's a state of 30,000 lakes—a peninsula with 3,751 miles of beguiling coastline. Furthermore, countless resorts offer delightful pool-side living in addition to nature's own aquatic contributions.
Bargain summer rates — Stay at the most luxurious of lodgings at a fraction of the winter-season cost. Oceanfront and lake-side cottages are available—family and package plans invite your consideration. See Florida resort ads in this paper for more specifics on low-budget rates—rates that mean you can now enjoy this premier vacation for no more than a usual one elsewhere.
Sports for everyone — Fish out in the seas for tackle-busting huskies such as sailfish and tarpon; from jetties, sea walls, and small boats also for tarpon and such gamesters as sea trout, pompano and snook. Inland lakes yield giant bass. Skin diving, shuffleboard, water skiing, golf, tennis, and scores of other sun-time diversions.
Spectator thrills — Cruise over crystal-clear lakes so transparent you can peer down 50 feet and see underwater castles and caverns and the colorful marine life that's inevitably in play. Rent an outboard for exploring exciting waterways and inlets. See regattas, swim meets, water skiing exhibitions, sports car races, ludicrous stilt-legged birds, lush botanical gardens.
Favorite tours — Play on the world's whitest beaches in Northwest Florida between Pensacola and Port St. Joe (route 98); see picturesque lower Gulf Coast resorts such as Tarpon Springs, St. Petersburg, Clearwater and Sarasota. Take your car over one of the longest open-water crossings in the world, the new 15-mile Sunshine Skyway drive over Tampa Bay. You can also whisk over the seas on a fascinating excursion to Florida's Keys. Don't miss the glamorous Trade Winds Coast (take route A1A along the Atlantic for an eye-opening trip between Miami and Palm Beach). And by all means visit ancient St. Augustine and fun-loving Daytona Beach in Northeast Florida.
Health —You'll relax on palm-lined shores, enjoy comfortable sun bathing thanks to spanking sea breezes. These same breezes contain 20% more oxygen than air in land-locked regions—and are relatively free of pollens that aggravate Hay Fever sufferers. Here, too, you delight to sea-fresh delicacies, so rich in vitamins and minerals.

Gay evenings — Dance under the stars on beautiful terraces, join holiday-minded groups in superb restaurants and friendly clubs. Many places to stay offer entertaining events such as splash parties and all are the centers of congenial social gatherings.
Plan your trip now. Send coupon for the colorful Florida booklet. Simply mail the coupon today.

KENTUCKY LAUREL FESTIVAL MAY 24-26

Some folks made their plans last autumn to visit Kentucky this spring. Those were the people who got reservations for the Kentucky Derby, but some failed to get reservations at all. They shouldn't be discouraged, for Kentucky offers other events just as colorful and exciting as the Derby.

One is the Kentucky Mountain Laurel Festival which celebrates its silver anniversary this year. The Festival will be held May 24-26 in Pineville. Of course, there are no horses running for roses at the Festival but there are Kentucky beauties competing for a crown of laurel.

The candidates for Mountain Laurel Queen are representatives of Kentucky colleges and universities. The girls, 18 of them this year, are the main attraction of the Festival which welcomes the return of Spring to Eastern Kentucky. Candidates are under watchful eyes of the judges from the time the Festival offically opens on Thursday night until the Queen is selected Friday afternoon. The coronation ceremony at Laurel Cove in Pine Mountain State Park is held immediately after the judges' announce their queen selection. This year Gov. A. B. Chandler will place the laurel wreath crown upon the queen's head.

FLOWERS CARPET VILLAGE STREETS DURING FESTIVAL

Carnations do a blooming business at Sitges, Spain, a Mediterranean fishing village and seaside resort.

Over 1,200 varieties, all grown near Sitges, will be on display during the city's Sixteenth National Carnation Show from May 29 to June 12. The climax of the festivities will come early in the show with the traditional flower carpets and religious procession of Corpus Christi on May 31.

For days in advance, flowers are in demand at Sitges not just by the bouquet or armful but by the wheelbarrow load. Blossoms are carefully stripped and their petals classified according to color.

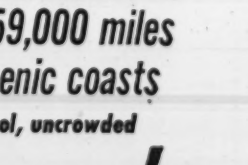

On the morning of Corpus Christi, all Sitges turns out to carpet its streets with the petals, working them into colorful and intricate designs. Patterns are devised in secret by the inhabitants of each block and competition is strong for the annual prize awarded for the most beautiful carpet.

At dusk a solemn procession sets out from the church and, amid fervent prayer, files through the carpeted streets, tramping the millions of petals into fine perfume.

BOOM IN TRAVEL TO LATIN AMERICA

Low Air Rates, Favorable Exchange Put It in Reach of Many.

Latin America — whose boundaries extend from Mexico and the Caribbean down through Central America and the West Indies to the vast continent of South America—is giving its long-time rival, the European continent, a real race for the United States tourist dollar this year.

In the past, distance, cost of transportation, and inconvenience of travel in some portions of Latin America limited the mass travel of vacationers from the United States—especially to the South American countries farther down the map.

Today, the travel picture is far different than it was only five years ago. Distance is no problem as the southernmost city is only overnight from St. Louis by air. Luxurious new hotels designed to cater to the requests of comfort-loving Americans have been built all over Latin America. The rate of monetary exchange today in most countries is so favorable to the dollar-spending visitor that even on a modest budget he can stay at first-class hotels, eat at the most expensive restaurants and bring back luxury shopping items from every country.

—Braniff International Airways.

Like the American cowboy, the Argentine "gaucho" is one of the most colorful and romantic figures of his country. Visitors to Buenos Aires may arrange trips to ranches or "estancias" where the gaucho lives and work.

Cost of air travel has been cut to a record breaking low. On April 23, for the first time in the history of air transportation between the United States and South America, fares became lower than those from the United States to most European points. Designed especially for vacation travel, the excursion tariffs put into effect by Braniff International Airways and three other airlines slashed rates to South America almost 30 per cent from normal fares for trips completed within 30 days by parties of two or more persons traveling together. A passenger can also use the lower rate and stop at any of the cities en route or returning from his destination city. These excursion rates apply to both first-class and tourist service and will be in effect until the end of the year.

Another advantage to travel in South America is that the seasons are reversed from the United States. When temperatures zoom to the hundreds during the summer, it's cool in South America. Autumn is springtime below the equator, and December here is mid-summer in most of the countries.

All expense tours offered by travel agencies include round-trip air transportation, accommodations at first-class hotels, sight-seeing trips and all around transportation.

Each of the Latin American countries and cities has a personality or "flavor" of its own. Rio, famed for its beautiful harbor, sugar-white beaches and worldly sophistication, will always be considered the "romance" city of South America. Recent inflation of the Brazilian cruzeiro has made the gay and usually expensive night life of its capital city cheaper for the United States tourist.

The sister city, Sao Paulo, is the fastest growing city in the world, and with its bustling business activity, is considered the industrial capital of South America.

From Lima, Braniff flies nonstop across the heart of South America to Sao Paulo, one of the longest and most spectacular schedules in the world across the top of the snow covered Andes peaks. Lima, itself, lying on the Pacific coast at the foot of the mountains is a rapidly growing modern city, but it still retains the old-world colonial charm from the centuries that it remained the capital of Spain's dominions in the new world.

Buenos Aires has often been compared to Paris because of its lovely boulevards, parks, continental charm and the many European nationalities represented among its people.

Panama is the "crossroads" of the world with its many peoples, languages and products from almost every land on the globe. A free port, it is a shopper's paradise where Swiss watches, English china, Swedish crystal, French perfumes and products from the Orient can be bought for almost half the United States prices.

PHOENIX NOW CELEBRATING 75TH ANNIVERSARY AS CITY

The desert spa of Phoenix is now celebrating the seventy-fifth anniversary of its incorporation as a city. That means some extra treats for tourists.

Some 90 years ago, the town was nothing more than a wide spot on a dusty desert road, a small hay camp supplying feed for United States' cavalry horses at nearby Fort McDowell. Since then, thanks to the miracle of irrigation, Phoenix has grown into a thriving, modern metropolis of more than 490,000 people in the metropolitan area, and into a popular desert vacation spot.

To mark this seventy-fifth anniversary of Phoenix as a city, civic leaders are planning a series of celebrations from now until the end of the year. Among the activities planned are special pageants, parades, pioneer reunions, motor cavalcades, sports shows with a Phoenix recreation slant, balls, fireworks and other special events.

'WELCOME, STRANGER'

Some 500 work ranches in Montana will extend a "Welcome, Stranger" greeting to tenderfeet from all parts of the country this summer.

Height of the season will be from June 15 to Sept. 15. Montana has been described as "a handful of people surrounded by unlimited space."

Travel the Highways of Romance in NEW MEXICO
THE LAND OF ENCHANTMENT

Most Americans, when mention is made of names associated with high adventure—names like Coronado, Geronimo, the Santa Fe, Goodnight and Chisum Trails—relive in fancy some of the events of those stirring days. It's no wonder so many Americans visit the Land of Enchantment, where, as they drive along fine highways, they are in fancy following trails made long ago—trails worn by moccasined feet of Indians, by the heavy boots of Spanish Conquistadores, by the wheels of covered wagons, and by the hooves of great trail herds of cattle. Why not make your plans, pack your bags, come along and drive these Highways of Romance—you'll visit Carlsbad Caverns National Park and nine National Monuments. You'll savor the lingering atmosphere of Spanish culture in the Old West. You'll explore the ruins of prehistoric Indian cities and visit living pueblos; and when you return home, you'll say "Best trip we ever took!"

Did you think that the largest churches were in Europe? It just isn't so, states the New York Convention and Visitors Bureau.

Resort, Hotel and Travel Directory

'MISERY HILL'

"Misery Hill" is the unloving epithet given by some chilled traveler to Mt. Washington in New Hampshire, the tallest peak in New England reaching some 6288 feet into the frigid mist.

But in the spring and summer Mt. Washington comes into its own. It is at the heart of some of New England's most magnificent scenery.

JUST THIRSTY

A circular well in a rock known as the Devil's Punchbowl, located on the Miami estate of the late William Jennings Bryan, is reputed to have been created by pirates as a source of fresh water.

Mountain Passes.

Colorado has 22 spectacular mountain highway passes that are more than 10,000 feet high.

List of Names Of Missouri's State Parks

A Complete Guide of Their Locations and How to Get to Them.

A tour of Missouri's state parks might offer that something "different" you've been seeking for a vacation or a weekend trip.

Traveling through the state, one finds real variety. The State Park system includes 27 parks which range from historic to virgin forests to scenic spots. Two new parks were added this year.

In these parks one will find shelter houses; man-made lakes for boating, swimming and fishing; horseback riding and hayrides; wildlife and nature trails; picnicking or modern dining lodges, group camping or space for individual camps out of doors and games of many kinds.

The parks are scattered throughout the state and contain more than 64,497 acres.

The State Park system has several claims to fame, including the largest single outlet spring in the United States; the largest Burr Oak, Swamp Red Oak, Shellbark Hickory, Possumhaw Holy and Mutabilis trees in the world; the birthplace of Mark Twain, and excellent trout fishing in three of the parks.

Here is a list of the state parks, their location and how to get to them. For specific information on facilities, in individual parks, write the State Park Board, Jefferson Bldg., Jefferson City, or the Missouri Division of Resources and Development, Jefferson Bldg., Jefferson City.

Alley Spring, six miles west of Eminence from Highway 19 on Highway 106; Arrow Rock, 18 miles northwest of Boonville, from Highway 40 on Highway 41; Dr. Edmund A. Babler Memorial, 20 miles west of St. Louis, from Highway 50 on Highway 109; Bennett Spring, 12 miles west of Lebanon, from Highway 64; Big Lake, 11 miles southwest of Mound City, on Highway 118; Big Oak Tree, 25 miles south of Charleston, from Highway A on Highway 102; Big Spring, four miles south of Van Buren, from Highway 60 on Highway 103; Confederate Memorial, one-half mile north of Higginsville on Highway 13.

Crowder, two miles west of Trenton on Highway 6; Cuivre River, five miles east of Troy, from Highway 47 on Highway 147; Johnson Shut-Ins (one of the new parks) eight miles north of Lesterville, from Highway 21 on County M; Knob Noster, 10 miles east of Warrensburg, from Highway 50 on Highway 132; Lake of the Ozarks, 19 miles northeast of Camdenton, from Highway 54 on Highway 134; Lewis and Clark, 20 miles southwest of St. Joseph on Highway 59; Mark Twain, 10 miles west of Perry, from Highway 154 on Highway 107.

Meramec, four miles east of Sullivan, from Highway 66 on Highway 114; Montauk, 21 miles southwest of Salem, from Highway 32 on Highway 119; Pershing, two miles west of Laclede, on Highway 36; Roaring River, seven miles south of Cassville on Highway 112; Round Spring, 12 miles north of Eminence on Highway 19; Thousand Hills, 3½ miles west of Kirksville from Highway 6; Sam A. Baker, three miles north of Patterson, from Highway 34 on Highway 143; Van Meter, 14 miles northwest of Marshall, from Highway 41, on Highway 122; Wallace, six miles south of Cameron, from Highway 69 on Highway 121; Washington, 14 miles southwest of DeSoto on Highway 21 and Fort Zumwalt, one mile west of O'Fallon, on Highway 40.

Highest Altitude.

The average altitude of West Virginia is 1500 feet, claimed to be the highest of any state east of the Mississippi.

SHEPHERD OF HILLS

The Shepherd of the Hills country is in the oldest developed tourist center of the state. Such places as Old Matt's Cabin, Inspiration Point and other actual places depicted in the book may be seen.

Popular from 1907 to about 1917, Harold Bell Wright's book is known as a heart-touching story about the rugged life of the Ozarks in the early 1900s.

Colorado's Flower.

Colorado's state flower is the white and lavender Columbine.

BETTER SERVICE

The Bar Harbor-Yarmouth Ferry will step up its present daily one-way schedule to a daily round trip during the tourist season, beginning June 26.

The ship will operate on a round-trip summer schedule until Sept. 14, when the single daily trip will be resumed.

Veteran of 'Big Top' Is Retiring After 53-Year Tour With Circus

Pat Valdo, 73, Puzzled by Adult Belief That Shows Were More Exciting in 'Good Old Days.'

By WATSON SIMS

NEW YORK, May 19 (AP)—One of the things that puzzle Pat Valdo, who has been in the business for 53 years, is that the average American adult believes the circus was more exciting in "the good old days."

"Almost all grownups feel that way about the circus," says Valdo. "They'll tell you the clowns were funnier when they were kids. They think the big cats were meaner and the stunt men did more dangerous and exciting things. Some of them even think the cotton candy tasted better."

Lounging in a darkened seat during an afternoon performance at Madison Square Garden, the 73-year-old program boss o fRingling Bros. and Barnum and Bailey refused to yield an inch to the good old timers.

As a spotlighted figure in tights whirled through a somersault on the tight wire, Pat suddenly emphasized his feelings with a jabbing finger.

"There now!" he exclaimed. "That's something they never saw in the old days. When a tight wire man turns somersault he has to lose sight of the wire and come down by feel. They wouldn't even try it until a few years ago. Now they do it forward and backward."

Valdo, who has worked with almost every "name" performer of this century, insists that the overall quality of the acts is as good and in many cases better than when he joined the circus in 1903.

He does concede, however, that fewer and fewer of the top performers are Americans. This is a change which saddens him.

"The old circus families are dying out in this country," he says. "I can remember when there were many American families with generations of tradition as riders, acrobats, trapeze artists and jugglers. But the kids have turned to other businesses. They still want to come to the circus for thrills but it doesn't appeal to them as a profession."

Most performers now come from Europe or Asia, where the professional family tradition still thrives. About 20 nationalities are represented in the 200-performer troupe which Pat is directing this year for the last time.

Valdo himself was no product of a circus family. He was born Patrick Fitzgerald, the son of a cigar manufacturer in Binghamton, N.Y. He caught sawdust fever from the family of a juggler who lived next door, and assumed his present name after joining the circus.

Few names anywhere in the circus world are known as well as that of the Irishman called Valdo. He was the white-faced clown whose visage still adorns one of the most familiar posters for Ringling Bros. and Barnum and Bailey.

He was also a juggler and a partner in a boomerang throwgin act before retiring as a performer more than 20 years ago. Since 1929 he has been general performance director for the company which bills itself as "The Greatest Show on Earth."

Pat's wife, former bareback rider Laura O'Mears, comes from a long line of English performers, but there are no children to carry on in the circus tradition. If there were children, Pat insists, no bars would be placed between them and any phase of life under the big top.

Wouldn't he be worried at the sight of a daughter with her head in a lion's mouth or soaring on the high trapeze?

"Maybe," he concedes. "It's a human reaction, I suppose. But in spite of all the thrills, the circus is a safer profession than most. In my time I've seen only two performers killed. Wouldn't you see that many fatal accidents in 53 years in any other business?"

As Pat talked, a man and two women began a high wire act above one of the three rings on the Garden floor. A half dozen men stood watchfully below with a hand net.

"The net's required under New York law," explained Valdo, "but most states don't require it and the performers actually don't want it. So long as they have any sort of contact with the wire—a hand, a foot, a heel or even a shoulder—you can figure they're safe.

"You have to keep a net under the flying trapeze, because there the performers let go and lose contact with the bar."

Pat is the only survivor of the circus troupe he joined as a young man. There has even been a 100 per cent turnover among the elephants.

"It's a funny thing about the elephants," mused Pat. "The old ones are all gone, but through the years I can't remember a single one dying. Usually they're sold or given away to zoos when they get older. A few of our oldest—up in their 60s, I guess—were left back in Sarasota (Fla.) when we went on the road this year. They don't travel too well at that age."

For years it seemed that Pat himself could defy time. But this year, at his doctor's insistence, Valdo won't complete the long tour which winds throughout America for the next eight months.

Pilgrims Flock to Shrines in India For Buddha's 2500th Birthday

Anniversary Is May 24 — Interest in Message of Teacher Has Noticeably Revived — Five Places of Pilgrimage.

By JONATHAN SWAYNE
The New York Herald Tribune-Post-Dispatch Special Radio.

NEW DELHI, May 19—Buddhists from many parts of the world are converging on the five places of Buddhist pilgrimage in northeast India for the 2500th birthday anniversary celebrations of Buddha on May 24.

In India, where India's influence is felt to this day, preparations are being made to honor the occasion and there is a noticeable resurgence of interest in the message of Buddhism. New roads are being built to ease the pilgrim's path to ancient shrines. Temples are being renovated and new rest houses are being put up to accommodate the pilgrim armies.

Gautama Buddha was born in a grove of trees in the tiny kingdom of Kapilavastu—Lumbini in modern Nepal—where his father was king. Buddha immediately took seven steps when born, legend says, and he proclaimed himself "chief in all the world." At his birth the earth shook, the crippled walked, the dumb spoke, the beasts were silenced and signs and portents appeared in the skies.

The Main Place.

Lumbini is the main place of pilgrimage. Here there is a haze of dust and heat through which purple mountains shimmer in the north. An ugly temple today marks Buddha's birthplace. It is being redesigned and famous wood carvers from Patan, in Nepal, are hard at work on the facade.

Thirteen miles away is an airport and from it laborers are building an approach road to the shrine. Other roads are being built to connect Lumbini with the Indian border, a few miles away.

Similar preparations are under way at Bodh Gaya, nearly 200 miles to the south, where enlightenment came to Buddha beneath a peepul tree. A large peepul still stands at Bodh Gaya and tradition says that it is related to the original which grew on this spot. Beneath fluttering prayer flags saffron-robed Burmese monks tend the 400 oil lamps that flicker at an altar at the foot of the tree.

The temple, which was built in the second century A.D., is magnificent, but its perfection is marred by the latest in neon lighting.

Became Buddha.

At Bodh Gaya the young warrior-prince came in search of enlightenment after leaving the court and his wife and child. He sat under the boddhi tree and on the forty-ninth day ignorance vanished and he became the Buddha. The site is being restored and nearly 400 householders are being removed so that their houses can be cleared from the temple site.

One hundred and twenty miles eastward, at Sarnath, near Banaras, in the state of Uttar Pradesh, Buddha preached his first sermon after his enlightenment. Here scores of masons crawl like flies in the tangled and flimsy scaffolding that surrounds the ancient shrine. The work of restoration is almost complete and extensive excavations by the archeological department are revealing something of the ancient greatness of the site.

The fourth place of pilgrimage is Rajgir where, on the hill at Gridharakuta, Buddha sat in meditation. There are Moslem, Jain, Hindu, and Sikh shrines here as well as Buddhist. Some Indian scholars feel that there should be Christian ones also because, they believe, Christ visited Rajgir on a journey he made to India.

Most Impressive Shrine.

The impression created on the pilgrim by these four shrines—even though some of their beauty is marred by a gawdy modernity—is minor compared to the impact of Kusinara, in modern Uttar Pradesh. Here Buddha died at the age of 80 and every pilgrim looks for traces of the ashes from his cremation which are believed to linger miraculously near the fourteenth century shrine which marks the spot.

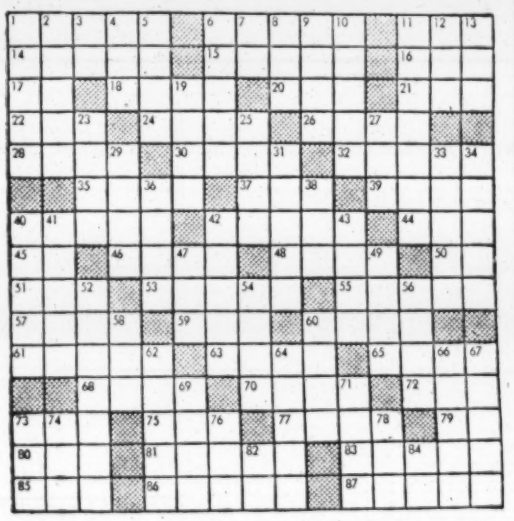

Kusinara is impressive in spite of, and perhaps because of, the aid of gentle decay that surrounds it, although this quiet is now disturbed by archeological excavations. Kusinara was in ruins as long ago as the Seventh Century when Hiuen Tsiang, the famous Chinese traveler, found it deserted. It still attracts travelers, most of them Buddhists, and at any time of the year there are monks from many countries.

And they are not always from the East. Sometimes the saffron robe covers a man from the West and inquiry reveals that the name he bore in former days was Brown or Ryan or Schmidt.

It is not unusual for Buddhist monks to spend years in contemplation beneath the great banyan tree at Kusinara. One such is from China. He came here 40 years ago when he was 20 and the local people refer to him respectfully as "the China baba." For many years his home was a tin trunk, high up in teh branches of the tree, but he has lost the agility of youth, and these days he lives on the ground, although still at the foot of his beloved tree.

STORM COOKING OVER SALE OF CANADIAN GAS

Huge Government Loan Will Be Necessary if Proposed Pipe Line Skirts U.S.

By FRANK FLAHERTY

The Chicago Daily News-Post-Dispatch Special Dispatch. Copyright 1956.

OTTAWA, May 19 — Shall Canadians burn up, share with Americans or leave in the ground for a year or two longer the natural gas discovered here in recent years?

The noisiest political row in years continues to swirl around this question. And right in the middle is Minister of Trade and Commerce, American-born Clarence D. Howe.

Howe is the key man in the Cabinet when it comes to policies relating to the export and import of fuel. He is the liaison man between government and business. While an outspoken champion of private enterprise, he has created more government-owned business corporations than any other living politician since he appeared on Canada's political scene 21 years ago.

Now he may create another, a government-owned gas pipeline, the world's biggest, extending from the gas fields of southern Alberta to Montreal.

Several Squabbles.

Howe is involved in several squabbles over the subject.

There is the battle between the Canada-Firsters and those who believe in selling to the nearest customer for the best price whether he is a Canadian or not.

The former maintain Alberta gas should not be sold to Americans until Canadians have all they want. They demand an all-Canadian pipeline running north of the Great Lakes, although the Midwest of the United States is much closer to the Alberta fields than the populous consuming markets of Canada. Moreover the Americans are ready to use gas whereas Toronto and Montreal lack distribution facilities.

The latter want to pipe Alberta gas south into the United States and serve Toronto and Montreal through a pipe line running south of the lakes.

Howe backed the Canadian-Firsters. A company was formed called Trans-Canada Pipelines Ltd. It undertook to build the all-Canadian line if it could sell gas for export to the United States at Emerson, Manitoba. It made a deal with Northern Natural Gas Co. of Omaha. The deal fell through mainly because the Federal Power Commission in Washington failed to grant a permit for the import of gas into the United States.

Government Offer.

Trans-Canada then made a deal with the Tennessee Gas Transmission Co. to take gas at Emerson for Midwest distribution. It also told the Canadian government the 3000-mile line could not be financed on the markets that could be built up in the short run. The Government offered to build the unprofitable section of the line through northern Ontario and lease it to the company.

The new Trans-Canada deal stirred up a row in the United States. Northern Natural and other western utility interests, including the People's Gas of Chicago, objected to the invasion of their territory. Tennessee's application to the Federal Power Commission for approval of the deal is bitterly opposed, and decision has been indefinitely delayed.

Meantime, Howe is being pressured to get on with the pipeline building. In Alberta hundreds of millions of dollars of capital are tied up in capped gas wells. Premier Leslie Frost of the fast-growing, heavily industrialized province of Ontario in backing Howe's plan to pipe Alberta gas into Ontario rather than into the United States. He has committed his treasury to a $35,000,000 contribution.

The province has no important local sources of fuel. Lacking some new sources its government sees the province running short of fuel and power in about five years.

$80,000,000 Loan.

Howe proposes to lend Trans-Canada up to $80,000,000 of public funds to enable it to build the first section of the line—Alberta to Winnipeg—this summer.

In return the Government will take a mortgage on all the company's rights and properties in which about $15,000,000 has been invested so far. If Trans-Canada fails to get Federal Power Commission approval and cannot sell its bonds and pay off the Government by next March the line will be completed as a government operation.

Government economists see the big pipeline as a sure bet even if no gas is exported to the United States. They believe eastern Ontario, Quebec and northern Ontario will eventually use all the gas that can be moved through the line which is starting out with 34-inch pipe at the western end. But until the eastern markets are built the line is a sure loser unless a big sale can be made to established American gas markets.

The Canadian taxpayer will have to pay part of the cost of the line on a temporary or permanent basis. Howe's aim is to get the Government in and out of the pipeline business as quickly as possible. His latest decision is to get the line started this year even if the Government has to get in and stay in.

Political Opposition.

Parliament must approve the deals, however — and fast — if the operation is to get started in July which is necessary to enable the first leg to be built before winter.

It won't unless the Government applies the cloture device to the filibuster proposal of Howe's opponents.

George Drew's Conservative party and M. J. Coldwell's Socialists are combining forces to prevent Howe from getting his legislation through the House of Commons.

The Socialists want a nationalized pipeline. The Conservatives profess to favor private enterprise but accuse Howe of bungling. They say the franchise should be taken away from Trans-Canada and given to another, preferably a Canadian-controlled, company.

South Viet Nam Seeks Aid.

TOKYO, May 19 (AP)—South Viet Nam has asked Japanese industry to supply more than a thousand technicians to help develop its automobile, aircraft, shipbuilding, communication and munitions industries.

UDALL (KAN.) CLIMBS FROM TORNADO RUINS

Town Almost Wiped Out a Year Ago Is Nearly Completely Rebuilt.

By FRANK TIFFANY

UDALL, Kan., May 19 (AP)—In a few terrifying seconds this town almost disappeared on May 25, 1955.

On that day a tornado struck this prairie community, killing 82 of its 756 people, crippling scores more, sweeping away more than 160 homes and inflicting $2,250,000 of property damage. No building in town was left whole.

Today—just a year later—Udall looks almost like a bright new housing development at some big city's edge.

Almost. There still are scattered homesites littered with debris, most of them because of delays in estate settlements. And Udall's trees still are skeletons, storm-stripped.

Modern, Safe Town.

This new Udall is modern—and it's the safest town in the country, says its 70-year-old banker, Udall-born Tracy Hil-Tracy Hildebrand.

"Seventy-five per cent of our new homes have storm shelters. The rest are being planned. We've a big one under our new high school, big enough for 150 people."

Near the high school is a wooden watch tower. There the ground observer corps posts a nightly sky watch to warn of approaching storms.

Udall's rebuilding is a story of courage. It is also a story of unselfish sharing by thousands of Americans, including servicemen overseas.

The year since the tornado has brought the hardest work Udall's people have ever tackled. They have erected 135 new homes, rebuilt the business district, recruited new merchants for those who died. Already nearly 400 of Udall's people are back, and more are building.

Fourth Congregation.

Except for that first Sunday, four days after the storm, Udall's church people haven't missed a service. Nazarene, Methodist, Congregational, they met in rural schools. Their new churches are already up or being built—and there's a fourth congregation, a Baptist church, now.

Mayor Earl Rowe is proud of his people. They're all grateful to the thousands who helped Udall come back—relief and disaster agencies, church, civic and veterans' organizations, contractors, labor unions, and thousands of volunteers who gave food, clothing, shelter, labor, machinery, funds and encouragement.

"Without them, we'd never have made it," Rowe says.

Above all, Udall's people are grateful to God. They'll have a memorial service this May 25—first anniversary of the tornado — a tribute to the storm's dead.

"I feel like it ought to be simple—maybe five minutes of silent prayer," Mayor Rowe said.

90TH ANNIVERSARY PARTY FOR STATE HISTORICAL GROUP

Members of the Missouri Historical Society will mark the group's ninetieth anniversary Thursday night in a nostalgic, candlelight setting in the Old Courthouse rotunda, where the society was founded. Formally attired guests will be serenaded by strolling musicians and a choral group.

Predinner conviviality will get under way at 7:15 o'clock in the Dred Scott room. Starting at 8:30, guests will renew acquaintance with food reminiscent of menus of such old landmarks of the neighborhood as Planters and Southern hotels.

Guests will be given copies of a new, illustrated, 84-page book about an old subject, "St. Louis—a Fond Look Back." The meeting, to conclude with Courthouse Museum tours for those so inclined, will include talks by Chancellor Ethan A. H. Shepley of Washington University, William A. McDonnell, J. Weslay McAfee, Julian Spotts and United States District Judge H. Moore, president of the society.

BIG STALIN PLANT MAKES ZIS AUTOS ONLY AS SIDELINE

100,000 Trucks, 450,000 Bicycles, 3000 Busses in Annual Output — 40,000 Employed.

By ROY ESSOYAN

MOSCOW, May 19 (AP)—The Stalin Auto Works is the sole producer of the Zis automobile, the Soviet Union's finest, but it's strictly a sideline.

Bicycles, trucks and busses are more in its line.

"We produced a few hundred passenger cars last year and probably won't make any more than that this year," says Ivan Ivanovich Karzov, deputy director of the giant plant.

He adds that during the same period the plant turned out 100,000 trucks, 450,000 bicycles and 3000 busses. He gave no exact figures for cars.

The Zis is made only on special order, which is not surprising because it costs, on an average 70,000 rubles. That is $17,500 at the official rate of exchange.

Each Zis is made according to the individual requirements of the high party or government official who orders it, as far as interior appointments are concerned. From the outside you'd have a hard time distinguishing it from a prewar Packard.

But that is purely accidental, says Karvoz who explains the striking and somewhat embarrassing similarity thus:

"Modern techniques of automobile manufacture have been developed to such a point that any car today looks like any other car."

He didn't explain why the Zis didn't look like an Oldsmobile.

Only Top Bosses Use Zis.

The Stalin Auto Works employs 40,000 workers, 40 per cent of them women. Outside of a few top officials, none of them drives a Zis.

The size of the plant and its total annual ruble production is clouded in the same mystery that shrouds all such statistics in the Soviet Union. Karzov only says that the works encompasses 60 miles of asphalt road and 40 miles of railroad.

On the basis of prevailing prices for its trucks, bicycles and busses, however, the plant's annual production must be in excess of two billion rubles—roughly $500,000,000.

Karzov says pay, on a piece work basis, averages 1150 rubles a month, about $288. Engineers and technicians draw 10 to 15 per cent more. Karzov himself draws 5000 rubles—$1250.

Amenities include two clinics, a hospital, a rest home and a sanatorium. Medical treatment is free and rest home facilities are provided at reduced prices.

The plant lays heavy emphasis on sports and athletic activity, operates 70 football teams and provides nursery and kindergarten facilities for workers' children.

Twelve per cent of the workers are Communist party members, another 15 per cent members of the Komsomol, party youth organization.

No Move to Change Name

Karzov laughs off reports that workers have petitioned for the removal of Stalin's name from the plant in line with the current government campaign to downgrade the late dictator.

He says he can't predict the future, but as for the present no such move is afoot. Any change would involve quite an overhaul job. Statues, busts and portraits of Stalin provide the main decoration throughout the plant.

And the plant's trade-mark, Zis, would have to go in the switch. It's derived from the initials for Zavod Imini Stalina, which means plant named after Stalin.

The plant started operations in 1924, putting out one type of truck. Today its assembly line is compared favorably with the best in Europe.

It has one distinguishing feature. Red banners and posters are plastered on every wall and strung across every aisle in every shop proclaiming in foot-high letters, "Peace will defeat war," "Glory to the indestructible unity of our party, people and government," "Hail to the internal policy of the Soviet Union, the policy of peace, security, equal rights and friendship of peoples," and other Communist slogans.

NEIGHBORHOOD CHEST X-RAY SERVICE THROUGH MAY 31

Free chest X-rays will be provided through May 31 for residents of the area bounded by Easton, Taylor, St. Louis and Belgrade avenues, the Tuberculosis and Health Society of St. Louis announced yesterday.

Information on the daily location of the society's mobile X-ray unit in this area, at the times it will operate, may be obtained by telephoning the society, CH 1-1554. Persons who obtain the service will be notified of the results after about three weeks.

The society provided 66,623 free chest X-rays last year through funds obtained by the sale of Christmas seals. In 1954, the tests disclosed 15 cases of tuberculosis in this area.

Young David Eisenhower

The Apple of His Grandfather's Eye

By Marvin L. Arrowsmith

(Editor's Note: Like boys his age everywhere, David Eisenhower sometimes forgets to brush his teeth and wash his ears. And he acts like boys his age when he's swimming in the White House pool, watching a Western, or playing under the constant, but unobtrusive, surveillance of Secret Service agents. Here's a rare, behind-the-scenes glimpse of the President's grandson.)

WASHINGTON, May 19 (AP).

OFTEN on Saturday mornings the joyous shouts of a stocky 8-year-old boy and the hearty laughter of the President of the United States ring out together in the White House swimming pool.

DAVID EISENHOWER . . . 'OH FOR BOYHOOD'S PAINLESS PLAY . . .'

The eager youngster is David Eisenhower, the President's only grandson, a sort of small scale carbon copy of the man relaxing there in the pool, wide grin on his face.

The grin scarcely ever is wider than when Grandfather Eisenhower is having a bit of fun with fun-loving David. In the pool, on the golf course, fishing for trout — anywhere and everywhere they have a wonderful time together.

Let there be no mistake —the President thoroughly enjoys his three granddaughters, too. But all the world knows there is something special about the relationship between a small boy and his grandfather. The President and David are a classic example.

What is he like, this small grandson of the President? Well, except for the fact his grandfather happens to be President, which puts the boy very much in the limelight, he is a good deal like the 8-year-old youngsters on your block. He forgets sometimes to brush his teeth and to wash his ears. He would rather stay in blue jeans than get rigged out in his Sunday best. He has a big, healthy appetite.

One of the biggest problems David's parents have is the way some of his playmates stand in awe of him as the grandson of the President. There is not the slightest indication it ever has spoiled David. But it is one reason his mother and father always emphasize a casual approach to the idea of grandfather as President. That always is the order of the day at the John Eisenhower red brick home at Fort Belvoir, Va., 15 miles from the White House.

● DAVID IS ENROLLED THIS YEAR in the second grade at St. Agnes Episcopal School, a private institution, at Alexandria, Va., about 10 miles from his home. His favorite subject is one that throws a good many youngsters—arithmetic—but his grades in all fields are top notch.

David loves to read and in that department he and his grandfather share a great liking for western stories. The boy also loves to draw, something else in which he takes after the President, an amateur artist of note.

In David's case, says his mother, "it always is a battle scene" done in crayon or pencil, "and the more conflict, the better." She adds, "There never is anything dainty about the drawings—they always are great panoramic scenes on huge sheets of paper."

Could that be an indication of military lineage showing through—an indication David may follow in the footsteps of his father and grandfather at the United States Military Academy at West Point?

"We'll wait and see about that," John Eisenhower says thoughtfully. "We don't push him in the direction of the Army. That's just out."

● BUT WITHOUT BEING PUSHED, David at 8 shows other signs of keen interest in things military. He often plays alone in his room with toy soldiers, deploying them in grand battle strategy. He has maintained a deep interest in all kinds of airplanes, an interest he first developed at the age of 4 when he learned to identify all the latest jet models at military installations where his father was stationed.

At home, the Eisenhower youngsters are allowed to watch television one hour a day and the parents carefully screen the programs. They don't want the kids by the set all the time, and they don't want them watching just any old thing.

● FOR DAVID, the daily routine at home except for weekends gets him out of bed about 7 a.m., an increasingly difficult chore as he grows older.

After a hearty breakfast he is off to school about 8:15. His school believes a half day is enough for second graders, so he is back home for lunch about 1 p.m. The afternoons are his for play in the neighborhood, so long as he gets in at least 20 minutes of study sometime before going to bed at 7:30. David and the two older girls have dinner with their parents.

Wherever David or the girls go there always are Secret Service agents along. In fact, their home at Fort Belvoir always is under their careful scrutiny.

Only once has John Eisenhower had any sort of an even minor problem in the relationship, and that problem he attributes with a laugh to David's boyish enterprise.

It developed the boy had taken to talking agents into giving him a lift in their car when he wanted to get someplace in the neighborhood in a hurry. The Major put a quick end to that when found out about it. Now David walks those short distances.

Analyzing Marilyn Monroe

Movie Star's Life Filled With Contradictions, Hidden Fears — Usually Turns Up Too Late for Appointments With Psychiatrist

First article in a series by the film critic of the London Daily Express, who spent a month in New York and Hollywood to investigate the phenomenon known as Marilyn Monroe. An ironic, hard-bitten reviewer, his conclusion is that Miss Monroe is "one of the most intriguing personalities in the entertainment world."

By Milton Shulman

IT WAS THE DAY before Marilyn Monroe flew from Los Angeles to Phoenix, Ariz., for the first day's shooting of her new film, "Bus Stop." She had spent the afternoon getting her throat sprayed for a virus, studying lines, and fitting costumes. The evening had been devoted to packing.

"Marilyn insists on doing the packing herself," her personal publicity girl told me. "It's the only way she knows where everything is. She'll have to be up at five in the morning to catch her plane at seven. And you know how Marilyn is about time. But she just must get that plane because there's a band, city officials and hundreds of cowboys and Indians from the rodeo waiting to meet her."

Yet in spite of an evening devoted to packing—she was only to be away a week—and in spite of the waiting reception committee, the band and the hundreds of expectant fans at the Phoenix airport, Marilyn missed the plane. The manner in which she missed it provides a revealing clue to the basic Monroe.

When the studio chauffeur arrived at 5:30 a.m. Marilyn was still in her dressing-gown. Many of the bags were not yet packed. Eventually, but with not much time to spare, the luggage was placed in a station wagon which was also to carry some of Monroe's retinue.

MISS MONROE WITH SIR LAURENCE OLIVIER, WITH WHOM SHE WILL APPEAR IN A FORTHCOMING FILM.

These days Marilyn is attended by enough people to make up a small-size gypsy camp. They include the vice-president of Monroe Inc., Milton Greene; his wife, a personal publicity girl, Greene's assistant, a dramatic coach, a hairdresser, a make-up man, a make-up girl and two maids.

The minutes ticked by but no Monroe. Suddenly out came a maid in a flurry. A pair of slippers had to be found. The bags were hastily unpacked and re-packed. A few minutes later the maid was out again. This time is was some jewelry. Bags unpacked and packed again. A third time the maid came out. Now it was dark glasses she was after. Again the bags were opened ransacked and closed.

"When Monroe was finally ready to leave," the chauffer told me, "we had 15 minutes in which to reach the airport about 10 miles away. I really hit it and when we got there the plane was still waiting to take off. Everyone leaped out. But not Monroe. She calmly opened her handbag, took out a mirror and began putting on lipstick. By the time she'd finished the plane had left. I have driven them all —big ones and small ones— but I have never seen anything like it in 15 years."

While Twentieth Century-Fox representatives made frenzied efforts to book passage on another plane, Marilyn surveyed the panic with a calm, baby-like incomprehension.

TO anyone who has known Miss Monroe there is nothing untoward about this incident. For her time does not merely stand still, it is paralytic. Her life is cluttered with the debris of broken appointments. She has been late for meetings with everyone from Darryl Zanuck to Laurence Olivier.

Nor is this the temperamental gimmick of someone who now feels important enough to keep the world waiting. She is too aware of her own limitations to be a prima donna. Being late has become an unconscious response to almost every crisis or turning point in her career. "She acted like a star even when she was a nobody," said an early friend trying to explain it.

When, as an ambitious and relatively unknown starlet, America's most important picture magazine sent along their best photographer to take her picture for their cover, she kept him waiting three hours.

"Most girls would have been there at dawn," said the studio press agent.

Sir Laurence Olivier had a taste of Monroe tardiness when he arranged to meet her for the first time in New York to conclude negotiations for the filming of Terence Rattigan's play, "The Sleeping Prince." Monroe and Olivier are to be its co-producers.

The fact that Sir Laurence had come all the way from London just to meet her did not stimulate her into being on time. There was an appointment for noon and it was postponed by Marilyn until six in the evening. At six sharp Sir Laurence, Rattigan, Greene and Jay Kanter, her agent, assembled in her flat and began to wait for Marilyn. She was in her bedroom getting ready.

Sir Laurence was anxious that the meeting be prompt since he had put through a call to his wife, Vivien Leigh, which was scheduled to reach him at 6:30. At 6:30 Monroe had still not emerged and arrangements had to be made to have Olivier's call transferred.

In spite of numerous anxious comings and goings on the part of Greene and Kanter, who kept issuing periodic bulletins on the state of her sartorial progress, it was not until seven o'clock that she finally appeared. She was wearing the simplest of dresses and apparently no make-up.

"I didn't know what to wear," explained Marilyn when I asked her why she had been so late. "Should I be casual or formal? Everything I put on wasn't quite right. But Larry was gracious about it. He kissed my hand and said, 'You can keep me waiting as long as you like but don't do it to the British press.'"

It is obvious that this concern about her clothes is merely an excuse for something deeper and more complicated in her personality.

"She knows about clothes and feels secure thinking about them," said a costume designer. "She uses them to put off facing things she is less sure about."

MARILYN herself supports this explanation.

"My personal life is still sort of a mess," she said, puckering up her brow in an effort to work it all out.

"In my professional life, being late is a desire not to be there and it's a desire that has something to do with my fears. But it's a habit pattern I'm determined to overcome." Words like "habit pattern" always sound strange coming from Monroe.

Another symptom of her uncertainly is the frequency with which she is attacked by viruses, has headaches, runs a high temperature. "If anything goes wrong on the set," said director Billy Wilder, "she will go off and be ill for 15 minutes."

MARILYN MONROE . . . HER CHILDHOOD WAS SPENT IN A SERIES OF PRIVATE HOMES AS A WARD OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY.

Yet, coupled with a natural shyness is a real desire to be noticed and admired. She will wear clinging and obvious clothes that provoke every camera lens within miles into action and yet be genuinely annoyed when she is surrounded by amateur photographers.

"She is the shy exhibitionist," said Rattigan. "She's the Garbo who likes to be photographed."

Contradictions and hidden fears have troubled Miss Monroe enough to cause her to seek psychiatric advice. Her course of treatments has had an erratic history because she is usually too late for her appointments with the psychiatrist.

But to a psychiatrist with whom I discussed Marilyn, her problems were quite straightforward.

"She would seem to be a typical hysteroid personality," he said. "Lack of love and affection in her early youth have produced marked subconscious feelings of insecurity. Hysteroids and exhibitionists are constantly in heed of sympathy and attention.

"Treatment is designed to enable them to grow up, for in many ways they are still children. Hysteroids crave to be loved, but unfortunately, there is never enough love in the world to satisfy them."

If lack of love and affection creates hysteroids, then Marilyn Monroe's early youth was an ideal incubator for her personality. Born in Los Angeles 30 years ago, Marilyn never knew her father. When she was 3 her mother suffered a serious mental and emotional crisis and was committed to a state hospital.

Her childhood was spent in a series of private homes as a ward of Los Angeles County. Between 1929 and 1935 she lived in 11 of these homes. Not until she was 16 did she know that her mother was still alive.

Shifted from environment to environment, Marilyn grew into a frightened, stammering child. One family would be extremely religious, warning her that dancing and films were "the work of the devil," another was a family of British actors—the father was a "stand-in" for George Arliss — who gave her lessons in juggling Indian clubs and doing a hula dance; another gave her whisky bottles to play with as dolls.

AT nine she was sent to a Los Angeles orphanage for a year and a half, where her reports described her as "normal bright, sunshiny." Not until she was 11 and sent to the home of a Mrs. Anna Lower did Marilyn meet anyone she felt ever loved her. Only then did she begin to emerge from the tight shell of daydreams into which she had withdrawn.

But Mrs. Lower was ill and there were two more homes that she was to live in before she was 15. It was then that the family with which she was living announced that they were going East and could not take her with them. At the time she was seeing a good deal of a young aircraft worker named Jim Dougherty. The prospect of moving into another strange home terrified her. Impulsively, although she was only 15, she married him when he asked her.

"I wasn't in love with him," Marilyn told me. "But he was very kind and I didn't want to go into another home. And I was astonished and flattered at being asked."

It was 1942 and Dougherty soon went off to join the Merchant Marine. Marilyn went to work for an airplane company as a waterproof-paint sprayer. Their immaturity and separation soon killed their marriage. But it was not until 1946 that they were divorced. Dougherty, married again and a father, is now a member of the Los Angeles police force.

To get pictures boosting the war effort, an Army cameraman had taken some photographs of Marilyn in a sweater operating a spray-gun. One look at the results and he enthusiastically encouraged her to take up modeling.

She turned up at the Blue Book Model School for a course in modeling in 1945.

"She hadn't enough money to pay for her course," said the owner of the school, "so I paid for it and she paid me back later.

"The first thing we tried to change was the horrible wiggle. It wasn't good for fashion models but it was Marilyn and we couldn't change it. She suffered from hyper-extension of the knee—in other words she is double-jointed—which made it impossible for us to teach her a graceful fashion model's walk. She also had unmanageable hair and her legs weren't very good. We advised her to give up fashion modeling and concentrate on photo modeling."

HER picture on a number of magazine covers soon attracted the attention of talent scouts. She was taken the rounds of the studios. At Paramount they decided she was not photogenic. Howard Hughes of RKO wanted to give her a screen test, but before it could be arranged she had been introduced to Ben Lyon, then the talent scout at Twentieth Century-Fox.

"She impressed me with her youth, beauty and ambition," recalls Lyon. "I signed her even before we took a test of her. She was given a seven-year option contract starting at $75 a week."

It was Lyon, too, who decided that neither her maiden name, Norma Jean Baker, nor her married name, Dougherty, would do for an aspiring starlet. Discovering that her mother's maiden name was Monroe, and thinking she had some of the qualities of Marilyn Miller he proceeded to christen her Marilyn Monroe. Marilyn has never been particularly pleased with the name.

A year and a half later her contract was dropped. She had been given a tiny part in a picture, "Scudda Hoo, Scudda Hay," and it ended up on the cutting-room floor. Columbia then signed her for the part of a burlesque queen in a musical and she was again dropped.

Now life had become grim. Determined to become an actress she had started to take dramatic lessons which were costing her $10 a time. At the Studio Club where she was living in a small room she was behind in her rent. By eating only two meals a day, she tried to eke out a livelihood by her modeling.

Tipping Absurd Practice

By Stan Delaplane

SAN FRANCISCO, May 19.

THE federal grabmen have put the nippers on a former headwaiter at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York, charging that cringing customers tipped him $122,677 instead of the $55,607 he reported on his income tax returns of 1949-52.

This is a fair nudge for service. And I have been wondering just how much it is worth to have somebody hold your chair and hand you a menu.

The business of tipping has gone to a point of absurdity. And nowhere so absurd as New York.

In the best New York restaurants, we now tip not only headwaiters and waiters. We have a captain to tip.

A captain has charge of a number of tables and the service goes something like this:

"Table for four?"

The head waiter now looks you up and down sadly. He measures the cut of your clothes and the trim of your hair. He sighs and consults his reservation list. He looks around the room. If your hand flutteers in your pocket and comes up with a bill, he smiles unhappily and snaps his fingers.

You are now assigned a table.

THE CAPTAIN draws out the chairs and hands you a menu.

The waiter comes over and takes the order. When he brings it back for serving, the captain comes over and lifts the silver plate cover from the dish. Voila! That ends his action.

On parting, the waiter gets 20 per cent. The captain hurries over to collect his $5. End of evening. End of bankroll.

This all, of course, is a good deal of nonsense. Since you need someone to lift covers off a dish like you need a pet octopus.

The hat check girl gets 25 to 50 cents for handing you your hat. A dish of quarters being on display to show you that anything less is short sport.

The doorman gets a half. For whistling at a taxi already waiting four feet away. And the taxi driver gets 25 cents. For not getting out and beating your brains out, I guess.

All you can do is hope that as entertainment it is off your income tax. And that the Government will catch all of them not reporting it on theirs.

Not long ago, the New York Times ran a cool and calculating article on tipping. And has been getting letters from the tipped ever since.

The general complant is that people who are tipped have to deal with the horrid public. And this is such a trial that they deserve a bonus.

IF THIS is the basis for tipping, I think I should be tipped for having to deal with waiter captains. I wish to be tipped

25c a sneer. I will report all my earnings and will wind up rich and respected.

The only thing about this thing that has amused me is the hat check girls. They work on a salary and your big-hearted gesture goes to the man with the concession.

The girls wear uniforms made especially without pockets. So they will not be tempted to pocket that glue. It takes a real burglar to think of a dodge like that. If you want to impress the hatcheck girl, give her a bill. She can slip that in her stocking.

The actual fact I have observed is that most tips buy nothing. And are given for nothing performed. The taxi driver is a good example. You'll never see him again.

An advance $10 to the headwaiter may help to impress somebody. You give him the $10 with your card. Tell him you want him to remember your name. He will do it.

But for purposes of service, you waste time and money.

At Possum Trot Farm

Starling---A Strong, Rough, Wiry Rascal

By Leonard Hall

There was an old man with a beard
Who said, "It is just as I feared.
"A starling, a wren,
"Two titmice and a hen
"Have all made their nests in my beard!"

THIS sad happenstance did not occur at Possum Trot, despite what you may think about the advantages or disadvantages of beards. It might even be that the limerick makes use of considerable poetic license, because unrelated species which occupy somewhat the same ecological niche in the biotic community are seldom found nesting amicably together. If you would like that put into less esoteric language, let's take the case of the English sparrow (actually a weaver finch) and the starling whose scientific name, Sturnus vulgaris, seems strikingly appropriate. Both of these birds are exotic or introduced species. As almost always happens when an exotic successfully establishes itself, it gets out of hand. Rabbits in Australia and English sparrows and starlings in America are cases in point. Starlings and sparrows can live together but the former, being stronger and more aggressive, will drive the latter away from any nesting site they can use. When this happens, the sparrow drives out the bluebird, wren, martin and tree swallow which are all infinitely more desirable species.

● DURING OUR FIRST SPRING at Possum Trot, a pair of starlings arrived and discovered a crevice in the eaves. Here they nested and made a tremendous racket. Some of their brood found its way into the attic and so did old Veronica, the cat. The starlings did not survive to remember the incident, though the cat never forgot it. The second spring the old starlings returned and brought another pair with them. This was too much for us and we took the ladders and went over all the eaves and cornices, plugging up every possible nesting site. The starlings left in disgust and, in the past eight years, have never come back during the nesting season.

The starling comes from a large European family containing 40 genera and some 150 species. In its native haunts the bird has both good points and bad. German and Bavarian foresters depend upon it to help control spruce moth, one of the worst of all forest pests. European market gardeners also look to these birds to take care of many harmful garden insects. Yet when the starlings take to eating produce, they can destroy a crop of grapes or olives in the vinyards and orchards in record time. Even in America, where country starlings very often flock with grackles or blackbirds, they probably have some value as insect eaters. There can be no doubt, however, that when they become numerous, they will drive out the many species of songbirds which nest in holes, hollow limbs of trees and old fenceposts. In the city they are a plain and unmitigated nuisance.

● A FELLOW NAMED EUGENE SCHEIFFLEN, who should have known better, imported 80 starlings into Central Park back in March 1890, and from that date they spread with remarkable rapidity: Staten Island the next year, Brooklyn the next—and on and on. Today the birds are naturalized all over eastern America and as far west as the Rockies. I'm not certain whether they have crossed to the Pacific Coast. Many things encouraged this increase. First, of course, the starling had no natural enemies in this country, although the accipiter hawks may prey on it. Second, it is a strong, tough and wiry rascal with an omnivorous appetite for anything from pigeons' eggs and baby sparrows to fruit and grain. It is a born bully to smaller species; yet as cautious as a crow when dealing with stronger birds or human beings. Finally, it raises two broods a season.

We find it impossible to dislike the starling entirely, for it is indeed "trim, dapper, ambitious and energetic" as was stated last week on the editorial page. A good house-to-house appliance salesman has nothing on the starling when it comes to these qualities. With its shiny black coat flecked with brownish gold and its cheerful, if often ribald, whistles, as well as its ability as a mimic, it is somehow ingratiating, as a street gamin might be ingratiating. Its "wolf whistle" always gives us a chuckle; and on the rare occasions when we pass Christ Church Cathedral on a winter's evening, we are no longer surprised to hear the call of "bob-white" or the "what cheer" of the cardinal floating down from the cornices.

● AS FOR THE RED-HEADED WOODPECKER, this fine bird is almost as rare with us as it is in Forest Park. But we can't lay this at the door of the starling, for we have all the other woodpeckers which use somewhat similar nesting sites: the hairy, downy, red-bellied, flicker and even the pileated. The red-head spends more time out in the open in plain sight than most of his cousins and is pretty likely to be seen if he is about. The species is also doubly conspicuous, since both male and female have the bright crimson head. They are, in fact, one of the exceptions that prove the old rule: "The male is always the most beautiful of the species." Because they do spend much time in the open, these woodpeckers have always been subject to persecution by small boys armed with .22s and BB rifles—and even adults armed with shotguns. I believe, however, that there must be some other ecological factor than this to account for the comparative scarcity of red-headed woodpeckers during the past two decades. It would take a lot of investigation and study to determine what this factor is; and since the bird is neither harmful nor income-producing (in the sense that game birds are income producing), it seems unlikely that anyone will undertake the necessary research. Meanwhile we miss the noisy, cheerful red-heads and, while not over-run with starlings, would gladly swap a few dozen for the handsome red and white woodpeckers.

Away From Frying Pan Into TV

Charlotte Peters Crashed Slam-Bang Into Show Business After Years as Housewife

By John Keasler

—By a Post-Dispatch Photographer.

CHARLOTTE PETERS, WHO HAS HER OWN SHOW ON KSD-TV, BELTING OUT A SONG IN THE MANNER OF ETHEL MERMAN.

A BOUNCY gal with a personality best described as surging has careened into St. Louis television circles leaving a wake of slightly limp directors and producers and, in her own three-ring circus style, built a growing number of fans eager to see what she'll do next.

Charlotte Peters is her name, a woman with show business so thick in her blood we would hesitate to accept a pint transfusion for fear we would spend the rest of our life doing a perpetual buck and wing.

St. Louisans are coming to know Charlotte, finally; she's got her own daily show now (12 noon weekdays on KSD-TV). But relatively few people, however, know the story behind Charlotte.

She spent years as a housewife, her singing done solely to the accompaniment of her washing machine, before she broke into show business. She looks, act and performs like she had been onstage all her life. Her story is one many another housewife has dreamed to a so-called happy ending. Charlotte did more than dream.

Her delayed break into show business is one of the least paralleled stories we know, the story of a woman who turned down good stage offers preferring her housewife life, and who, at last, has fulfilled both ambitions. That's tough to do.

All sorts of anecdotes revolve around Charlotte, many of them hinging on such born-yesterday comments of hers as the one offered at a highly seemly, civic-minded meeting here. The speaker had been dwelling on political administration.

"I see," said Charlotte, "Now tell me, does that have anything to do with the Mayor's Board of Freeloaders?"

Confusing Freeholders with freeloaders, for Charlotte, is easy—we were talking to her recently when she was trying to sell the powers that be on the idea of telephoning the Grace Kelly arena grounds on The Wedding Day. Nothing came of this, which is just as well inasmuch as Charlotte seemed under the impression the wedding was in Morocco.

WHETHER such Billie Holiday tactics are studied is the subject of argument. Our own opinion: Some is, some ain't. In any case, her personality is best summed up by the remark of a woman we know.

"Oh, sure, I know Charlotte Peters," the woman said. "I've been to several parties with her."

"Several?" asked the woman's husband. "I don't remember but one."

The woman thought it over, said: "Well, when you've been to one party where Charlotte Peters attended, it always seems like several."

And so it does.

Her half-hour show reflects the effervescence. Part of our interview was conducted as she was swinging by a rope from the studio roof, wearing a parachute, red flannels and a space helmet and singing at the top of her voice. We forget why and don't want to go into it. The show's format is flexible, to say the least.

Searching about for a St. Patrick's day motif she called up the police chief, asked for, and got, a few dozen Irish cops as guests that day.

When she interviewed a dealer in camel saddles, she tried to borrow a camel and was saddened when the zoo wouldn't lend her one; very shortsighted, she feels.

And so, as they say, on. She interviews people, any and all sorts, eschewing "celebrities" when possible because she has the suspicion (and this may be the beginning of the greatest movement since invention of the press agent) that people are getting just a trifle sick of celebrities for breakfast, lunch and dinner.

We won't try to describe the show, realizing our limitations, inasmuch as it's largely impromptu, anything might happen and quite often does.

Charlotte sings. She sure does. She can belt 'em out, a la Merman, or sadden 'em soft. Like many good performers, her emotions are close to the epidermis and come through easily. Like many showpeople she cries easily, she has the quick tears. Her laugh startles passersby for blocks around.

She's led a split life, both of them extroverted, one the longing for show business, the other for her family.

She had a strange childhood. Her mother, a champion dancer with no formal training, died young. Her father, a Morse telegrapher, worked at Miami's Hialeah race track and in New York. Charlotte, born in St. Louis, lived in both places; settled in St. Louis when she was 12. Her happiest childhood memory was her mother playing the upright piano she kept in the kitchen, while Charlotte learned the routines.

Charlotte finished the eighth grade, worked at a succession of jobs, as a teen-ager was superintendent of eight grown women engaged in the unlikely occupation of putting handles into golf clubs. Charlotte married young, has two children, Mike, a 12-year-old son, and Patricia, a teen-age daughter. Her husband is in sales.

Her home and family mean everything to her. However, the show business itch, one of the least curable maladies known, was always there, all through the diaper and detergent days. Yet, until a very few years ago she had never made a professional appearance; singing at parties was her only outlet.

One day, while she was bent over the washing machine, she heard a radio broadcast announcing tryouts for amateurs for TV. She dried her hands and, typically, called directly to the people running the contest—auditioned, won the contest, went back to her washing machine.

It was a year later before she made her very first appearance before a live audience, singing at a benefit on television. She wow'ed the people. Night clubs offered her singing spots. She went back home.

She auditioned for NBC and was offered an attractive contract—in New York. She stayed in St. Louis.

But when show business possesses you it doesn't let go. She got tired of the constant conflict within herself. She was sitting in the kitchen one day—again at the washing machine—reading a book called "Show Biz."

IMPULSIVELY, she made a long distance call to Billy Rose, the impresario, got through directly to him somehow. She says always go directly to the top—it's the secretaries who cause the trouble, the big people understand you.

"I want five minutes of your time," she told Rose. "I'm tired of fighting with myself. I want to know, flatly, if I'm any good or not. That's all. Period. I'll pay my own way there."

Rose, who knew what she was talking about, agreed. She found time a month later, sat up on the train to New York, assailed the secretarial ramparts, strode into Rose's office—right there accomplishing more than many a hopeful professional.

"You sing, huh?" said Rose. "Like who?"

Like Merman, she said. Like Morgan, like Martin, like Waters. Who would he prefer she sing like? He choked and spluttered slightly — told her o.k., get a piano player. She did, one who knew Rose well and who said Rose might listen to half a song—maybe by some miracle hear as many as three.

She stood there in The Great Man's office, scared stiff. "What dramatic training?" None. "What voice training?" None. "Where's your music?" She couldn't—and can't—read music.

"Well, what key do you sing in?" snapped the pianist.

"I don't know what key," she said. "You start."

Everybody looked at everybody. Rose asked, "Just what training do you have?"

Charlotte thought. She said, "I can mix cement."

(She is very good at this. She cemented the wall around the patio at her home in Webster Groves. She designed the house herself. Again typically, it was featured in a leading home magazine and she received calls from around the country. "Bathrooms everywhere!" Charlotte exults.)

Mix cement? Rose said, "So all right. Sing."

She kicked off with "Hostess With the Mostest." Merman. Rose said nothing. Next she did "Honeybun." Martin. He didn't tell her to stop. Next, "Happiness Is a Thing Called Joe." Waters. No stop sign. "Cabin in the Sky." Another. Another.

The producer, who never listened to more than three songs, asked, "Do you know 'My Bill'?" The seventh song.

She did. Tears ran down her cheeks as she sang it.

She recalls that Rose cleared the room, sat her down, said, "You said you were Merman, Morgan, Martin. I'll tell you something. You're three times less than you think you are—but you're 20 times better than I thought you'd be."

He would give her a contract. For a year. He would be the toughest blankety-blank coach she ever dreamed of. She needed polish, finnesse, he told her.

But she already had, he said, the thing nobody can teach you—the thing nobody can buy. The spark. After the year, musicals, the stage—

Stipulation: move to New York with her family.

She stayed in St. Louis.

THE first time we ever saw her was about four years ago, at the Newspaper Guild's Page One Ball. Sophie Tucker had just finished singing. Over the applause somebody introduced somebody named Charlotte. Our thought was—poor gal, following Sophie Tucker. Charlotte grabbed the audience, shook it, whammed out lyrics, bowed to the ovation, did encores.

So, with a talent that can successfully follow Sophie Tucker, Charlotte—with her children far out of the age where constant care was needed—skirted the edges of St. Louis show business, doing such things as reading dairy commercials.

She made occasional appearances on "To the Ladies," they became more frequent, she became a regular, she caught on—now it's "The Charlotte Peters Show," her own place in show business in the town she chose to live in, despite the tinseled lures.

"Sure, I wanted to be a musical comedy star," she said. "I wanted more to be in my own home and see my son when he came home with his first black eye."

She did. She's that rarity, somebody who's fulfilled twin ambitions. She said, "Once I got a letter offering a Paramount screen test. I thought it was wonderful and knew just what to do with it. I decided to frame it and put it over the washing machine."

Insurance

Social Life in Marriage

By Dr. Paul Popenoe

ONE of the easiest ways to improve a marriage is by improving the social and recreational life. This is such an inexpensive and pleasant procedure that it is hard to understand why more couples do not follow it.

When a wife consults me about her marital difficulties I usually ask, "What about your social life? Do the two of you do interesting things together? Do you have a circle of friends whom you enjoy being with?" Quite often she replies, "Dr. Popenoe, we haven't any friends at all; and we have no money for entertainment." It's easy, then, to see where this couple can start to improve their marriage.

You don't have to buy friends. You can get plenty of them for nothing. All you have to do is to be a friend yourself. The young married couples' classes in most churches offer a ready-made circle, and others can be found through business or clubs or merely neighbors.

SOMETIMES it is even more important to give up old "friends" than to get new ones. Many a couple lets itself be tied down to a group of associates who are boring if not actually harmful, people who do not have sound standards of marriage or of sexual ethics; people who drink too much; people who are a complete waste of time.

The first thing for husband and wife to do is to agree on what kind of social and recreational life they want. Sociologist Robert Williamson, studying some hundreds of marriages, found that agreement on this point was more important than agreement on any other except sex. The happiness of the marriage was considerably more influenced by agreement on recreation, for instance, than on agreement as to how the finances should be handled—important as the latter certainly is.

Sit down with your husband and give yourselves a check-up on this. Are there things you could do together that would give more satisfaction, at less expense, than some of the things you are now doing? If so, don't hesitate to change.

YOUR RECREATION should be mutually shared, should be varied, should be constructive, should be inexpensive, and it should call for active participation. Some studies show that 90 per cent of the family's recreation demands no more than sitting passively. A little of that is enough. Get into something active, even if it means missing a few TV programs. It's good insurance for the success of your marriage.

Answers to Questions.

Q. Is it true that an only boy in a family of girls (I have one!) is sure to be spoiled?

A. No; but he is exposed to danger. Teach him to take a protective attitude toward the girls, and don't let them wait on him unduly.

Q. High-school daughter resents it when I sit up for her. Shouldn't a mother do that? She says others don't, and I say maybe that's where some delinquency starts.

A. Have a definite understanding in advance as to when she will return, with agreement that she will phone you if delayed. As long as she lives up to this agreement, you needn't wait up for her, unless there are special circumstances that I don't know.

Q. YOU SAY A MAN should not marry merely to get a substitute mother. But suppose he finds a girl who wants to marry in order to get a substitute father—couldn't they pair off nicely?

A. Each would feel cheated. They'd better not marry at all—at least not until they are weaned emotionally. They would be two clinging vines with nothing to cling to—a frequent combination, but one that always ends in misery.

Q. I'm a second wife, living in the house my husband and his first wife occupied. Whatever I do to arrange the furniture or decorate the rooms he will carelessly remark, "She used to have the room this way" or "She used to cook this all the time." I'm not jealous of his past life, but this really hurts me because it is so frequent. I don't know how to approach the subject without hurting his feelings.

A. It's certainly bad taste on his part, and I think you should have no hesitation in pointing out to him that you're a bit sensitive about it. There's no reason why he should resent such a hint.

The General Was a Lady---From 'Grand Deception'

This is the first installment of a series from the book, "Grand Deception," describing some of the great hoaxes in history.

IN his "More Tramps Abroad," Mark Twain wrote a brief account of an amazing imposture which he heard about in South Africa.

"I saw some of the fine old Dutch mansions, pleasant homes of the early times, pleasant homes today, and enjoyed the privilege of their hospitalities," he wrote. "And just before I sailed I saw in one of them a quaint old picture which was a link in a curious romance—a picture of a pale, intellectual young man in a pink coat with a high black collar.

"It was a portrait of Dr. James Barry, a military surgeon who came out to the Cape of Good Hope 50 years ago with his regiment. He was a wild young fellow, and was guilty of various kinds of misbehavior. He was several times reported to headquarters in England, and it was in each case expected that orders would come out to deal with him promptly and severely, but for some mysterious reason no orders of any kind ever came back—nothing but just an impressive silence.

"Next, he was promoted—away up. He was made medical superintendent - general, and transferred to India. Presently he was back at the Cape again and at his escapades once more. There were plenty of pretty girls, but none of them could get hold of his heart; evidently he was not a marrying man. And that was another marvel, another puzzle, and made no end of perplexing talk.

"Among other adventures of his was a duel of a desperate sort, fought with swords, at the castle. He killed his man.

"This story seems to be arriving nowhere. But that is because I have not finished. Dr. Barry died in Cape Town 30 years ago. It was then discovered that he was a woman."

THE FACTS IN THE CASE
By David Porter

Dr. James Barry died in an apartment at 14 Margaret Street, London (not in Cape Town as Twain reports), on July 25, 1865, and Hart's Army List, as well as the newspaper announcements of that month, give the Inspector General's age as 71. The first person known to have discovered Dr. Barry's true sex was the physician who examined the body and signed the death certificate. It must have been a startling discovery, indeed, for the young Army doctor, as he himself had served several years under the Inspector General.

The astonishing news was officially reported to the Horse Guards. An autopsy yielded the further startling news that Dr. James Barry had been a mother, probably early in life. Since Dr. Barry's real name and origin remain a mystery, we do not know whether she was married nor what happened to the child.

Dr. Barry's motherhood is, however, the only clue we have as to the chain of events that might have been instrumental in leading her to discard women's clothes for those of a man.

Possibly she was loved and left, with or without her acquiescence, and gave birth to an illegitimate child, which either conveniently died or was disposed of in some fashion. Then, having found through unhappy experience, that it was a man's world, she may have decided to be a man for the rest of her life. Or else she was married at a very tender age and found it a disillusioning experience.

EVERYBODY WONDERED WHY THE GAY YOUNG ARMY DOCTOR NEVER MARRIED.

At any rate, she either contrived to get hold of some money or she was supported in her masquerade by her family or some benefactor. For in 1808, when she was 16, she was accepted as a student in Edinburgh University, under the name of James Barry.

ACCORDING TO the testimony of fellow-students, who were interviewed after her death, no one apparently suspected James Barry of being a woman. She was somewhat nervous at going through certain rough neighborhoods in Edinburgh at night, and often asked a fellow-student to accompany her. Also she absolutely refused to box. And she had an odd manner of keeping her arms folded over her chest that the other students found quite amusing.

After obtaining a medical degree at Edinburgh, Dr. Barry disappears from the records for several years. Then in 1816 she re-appears as an Army surgeon. For a time Dr. Barry was stationed at Quebec. There she became notorious for her sharp temper.

Once when a man taunted her by calling her voice squeaky and effeminate, Dr. Barry—despite her lack of practice in boxing and the dangers of exposure involved—took the man on with bare fists and gave a good account of herself.

She later served in the Mediterranean, the West Indies and South Africa. She was promoted regularly and once was particularly commended "for assiduity and skill during a smallpox epidemic."

IN HIS MEMOIRS, the Earl of Albemarle describes Dr. Barry:

"In this learned pundit I beheld a beardless lad, apparently of my own age, with an unmistakeable Scotch type of countenance, reddish hair, and high cheek-bones. There was a certain effeminacy in his manner which he seemed to be always striving to overcome. His style of conversation was greatly superior to that one usually heard at a mess-table in those early days of non-competitive examinations."

We get an idea of the constant care Dr. Barry had to exercise to avoid disclosing her imposture, from the report of a young man who once shared a cabin with the doctor on an intercolonial steamer plying between St. Thomas and the Barbados. The young man occupied the top bunk; Dr. Barry, then Deputy-Inspector of Hospitals, had the lower. Dr. Barry solved the delicate problem by peremptorily ordering the young man out of her cabin every morning: "Now younger, you clear out while I dress."

This same young man's report informs us that a goat was kept on board to provide Dr. Barry with milk. The doctor's diet apparently was strictly vegetarian, and she never touched intoxicating drinks. But, at the General's table, where she and the young man both sat, Dr. Barry had everyone in stitches with her amusing tales about her powers as a lady-killer.

Investigation after Dr. Barry's death, indicated that neither her servants nor her comrades-at-arms, despite close daily fellowship, had had an inkling of the truth. The facts about Dr. Barry's real origin were either never uncovered by the British Army or were hushed up through high-level intervention.

The fragments available to us of this amazing woman's life open up innumerable fascinating lines of conjecture. What an incredible inner life she much have led. What secret fears, triumphs, conflicts must have been her lot. What innumerable stratagems she must have practiced.

At any rate, this unique woman, whose tombstone inscription still bills her as "Dr. James Barry," successfully competed with men in a profession denied to her fellow-women for more than half a century after she took the Hippocratic Oath.

Sweet Land of Opportunity

John Santangelo of Italy Found America So, Is Now Sponsoring Hundreds of Immigrants

By Virginia Irwin

A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch

NEW YORK, May 19.

AS a kid over in Italy, John Santangelo never had enough to eat. His family lived in a one-room farmhouse and he and three of his seven brothers slept in one bed. He had no shoes until he was 13 years old and never saw an electric light until he was called up for service in the Italian army. He was never inside a schoolhouse and was a grown man before he learned to write little more than his own name.

Today Santangelo is a multimillionaire. Head of a vast publishing business at nearby Derby, Conn., that prints 12,000,000 song-lyrics, comics and fan magazines a month, kindly, 57-year-old "Uncle John," as his more than 450 employes call him, arrived in this country just 33 years ago with only a few dollars in his pocket.

As time passed and he began to prosper in America, he promised himself that someday he would try to give other Italians a chance at the opportunities to be found on this side of the Atlantic.

Santangelo is now realizing his dream, and in a big way. He is currently sponsoring 208 Italian families, totaling some 1400 men, women and children, being admitted to the United States under the Refugee Relief Act.

Uncle John's immigrants form the largest group ever sponsored for United States entry by a private American citizen. As the families arrive, 25 and 30 at a time, he is seeing to it that they are settled in homes he is providing for them in the Derby community. Jobs for all male immigrants of working age are waiting in his printing and publishing establishment. By the end of summer the immense amount of red tape connected with the undertaking will have been finally cut and all 1400 immigrants will have taken up their new lives in the United States.

"I want these families to come here so their children can enjoy the wonderful life in this country that my own children have," Santangelo said.

ALWAYS short of help at his mammoth Charlton Press which must operate around the clock with three eight-hour shifts for maximum efficiency, Santangelo could use many more workers than those among the incoming immigrants. Head of more than 20 satellite corporations which serve to make his vast publishing operation self-sufficient, he always has jobs going begging because of a labor shortage in the small Connecticut community. Uncle John doesn't want anyone to think that his immigrants are going to deprive American workers of jobs.

"I could put 300 men to work tomorrow if I could find them," Santangelo said. "The floods last fall put us months and months behind in our orders."

For several months after the August and October floods in Connecticut, in which John suffered a loss of $225,000,000, his nearly wrecked printing establishment was idle but he kept all his employes on the payroll.

Since Connecticut firms do not insure against floods, the $2,250,000 loss in the floods came right out of Santangelo's own pocket. The federal government offered him a $2,000,000 reconstruction loan at three per cent interest, but John declined with thanks.

"Two things I can say," he smiled. "One is that I have never borrowed a dime. The other is that I have never broken my word."

In sharp contrast to the big business man of today was the 24-year-old Italian farm hand who arrived in the United States in 1923 with $20 in his pocket. He spoke no English. In Norwalk, Conn., where he had a brother who had come to this country a few years earlier, he obtained a job in a tire company, prying old casing off rims at 40 cents and hour. When John's left hand was almost cut to ribbons by the tire iron he left to find work in New York. Wandering around the city, he stopped to watch the construction work on a new building being erected and fell into conversation with some Italian bricklayers. The men told him what he could hardly believe—that bricklayers earned $2 and hour.

AT TOP, JOHN SANTANGELO, AND (BELOW) IN ROME WITH SOME OF THE IMMIGRANTS HE WILL SPONSOR.

"With what he had saved from the job wrestling with tire castings, John bought a trowel, level and overalls. The next morning he returned to the building and talked the foreman on the job into letting him go to work. Other Italian bricklayers on the project helped him the first day and John learned fast. After three months, during which he laid more bricks than any other man on the job, John was made foreman. Soon he was foreman of a crew on a school construction job in White Plains, N. Y. He got the job done three months ahead of schedule and was rewarded with a $5000 bonus.

By 1926, John had his own contracting business. He won the sub-contract for masonry interior partitions in the mammoth Roxy theater in Manhattan. For 11 months he and one helper worked and slept in the theater. They worked from five in the morning until 11 at night. And when the job was completed Santangelo had earned more money than he could have earned in a lifetime in Italy. He started a development and built homes in White Plains.

IT was while John was courting pretty Carri Altarelli—now Mrs. Santangelo — the daughter of an Italian laborer in nearby Derby, Conn., that he came upon the idea upon which his present $18,000,000-a-year publishing business was built. Carri Altarelli played the piano by ear. One night while playing "Shuffle Off to Buffalo" for John, she remarked that she knew the tune but not the words. On his next trip to New York John picked up a copy of the song for 35 cents. He didn't want the music. He just wanted the words. But he had to take both.

"I thought about the 35 cents I had to pay just to get the words to that song," John explained, "and I thought in America you should be able to buy the words without buying the music. That is when I got my idea."

The next time he was in New York, John bought copies of 50 songs, took them to a printer and told him to print all the lyrics on a single sheet of poster-colored newsprint. Then John started making the rounds of New York stores and newsstands. His song sheets would sell for a dime—five cents for John and five cents for the merchant. By 1933 the sale of John's flimsy single sheets bearing the words to 50 popular songs had reached 7,000,000 copies a month. At first John worked alone selling to stores and newsstands in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and New England; then he began hiring salesmen and soon had 500 men working for him.

In 1936, he built his own printing plant for his song sheets in Waterbury, Conn. and four years later moved his base of operations to his wife's home town or Derby. Over the years, Charlton Press has added comic and fan magazines to the printing of song lyrics and today has some 1000 distributors throughout the country and in many nations abroad. Such publications as "Atomic Mouse" are international and are reprinted in 17 languages throughout the world.

Of the eight song books published by Charlton Press, "Hit Parader" is the granddaughter of the single-sheets of the 1930s and sells about 750,000 copies a month. Santangelo doesn't worry about imitators; his Charlton Press has for years been the world's largest publisher of song magazines. Charlton also prints 27 of the some 350 comic books put out in the United States, all bearing the seal of approval of the Comics Magazine Association of America. One of the founders of the Association, Santangelo more than a year ago revised his entire produtcion of comic books and today features titles completely devoid of horror, terror and crime.

SANTANGELO is proud of his vast printing plant, but he is prouder still of his employes. Folks in the community say that John treats his employes "just like family." In turn they accord him a heart-warming loyalty.

John spends a lot of time figuring out ways to keep his employes happy. Years back he began a pension plan based on a point system. After 20 years' service, an employe can retire with the same pay for life that he was receiving on the day he retired. If he dies his wife gets the retirement pay as long as she lives and if the wife also dies, children receive the retirement pay until they are 18. Employes, however, are not forced to retire at the end of 20 years and if they keep on working they get two pay checks, regular wages and pay from the retirement fund.

"What good is a pension at 65?" Santangelo asks. "Let a man retire as young as he wants to. Here if a boy starts work at 16 he can retire after 20 years. At 36 he is young enough to enjoy life. Does a man 65 years old enjoy going to the cabarets and eating rich food? At 65 he is too old for that. I like to see men retire when they are young enough to enjoy life."

Santangelo has bonus plans, birthday plans, incentive plans, suggestions plans and assorted other plans to keep his workers happy. There is an education plan with a fund for helping pay the college tuition of the children of any employe who has been with the company a year or more. There is an entertainment plan with some sort of special "doings" almost every week. As part of this plan Santangelo some years ago purchased the only bowling alley in Derby and turned it over to his employes for their exclusive use. He also built a 1400-car fresh-air theater to which his employes and their families are admitted free.

It is in such surroundings that Uncle John's immigrants will settle down. He figures that in just a few years most of the 208 families will own the homes he is building for them.

So far some 400 immigrants have already tasted Uncle John's benefactions. They find life here unbelievably good.

Santangelo belongs to no clubs, dislikes drinking places and shuns politics. His only hobby is cooking. He loves to broil steaks and serve Italian wine in the plant cafeteria when visitors come to the Charlton Press. He delights also in cooking Sunday breakfast for his wife and his children, John Jr., 13, and Elsie, 17. His oldest son, Charles, 20, is married and not long ago made Santangelo a grandfather for the first time. Santangelo loves children and to his delight found recently in checking through the records of his immigrants that there are at least seven families with 14 children.

Despite his wealth, John still rises at 5 a.m.—"a habit I got into when I was a bricklayer"—and seldom leaves his printing plant before 7 p.m. But he takes four months off each year, for two two-month-long trips to Europe. He takes his family and one of his cars and seldom misses visiting his home town of San Valentino, where his heavy American automobile invariably gets bogged down in the mud of the town square.

"I never worry about business when I'm on vacation," John smiles happily. "This place runs just as well when I am in Europe as it does when I'm here."

'Loafer's Glory'

Stirring In Haven Of Rest

By Hal Boyle

LOAFER'S GLORY, N.C. May 19 (AP).

WATCH your step, New York; beware Chicago; look out, Los Angeles. America's most beautifully named community — Loafer's Glory, here in the heart of the Blue Ridge Mountains of western North Carolina—is on the march.

After 55 sleepy years, it is ready for growth. It invites fresh capital and new tired blood. Anyone who can tell a tall story well, who can yawn restfully in one of the loveliest settings in the western hemisphere, is welcome to become a pioneer in Loafer's Glory's cautiously slow climb to metropolitan stature as the modern Athens of those who put content above worry.

Before investing in Loafer's Glory's future a stranger might well want to know more about the town.

Well, it was founded—no on seems sure just when—early in the last century. Today it consists of a bend in the road, 30 acres and five families. If you stand on the outskirts and throw a rock, you are more likely to hit a person if the rock falls in the suburbs than if it lands in the center of town. What other United States community 100 years old can make this claim?

HOW DID Loafer's Glory get its name? Charles O. Burleson, 62, believes it came from his grandfather, Jonathan.

"There was a country store sat there by the bridge across Cane creek," he recalled. "In the evenings the old fellows used to gather there to play checkers, pitch horseshoes and spin yarns.

"Granddaddy passed by once and said: 'It's just a loafer's glory'. Somehow the name stuck. The old settlers liked the name. Most of them are gone now."

Another story has it that it was an angry housewife who applied the term first. "But I know the name goes back at least 60 years," said Burleson. "Some people tried to change the name to Vivian's Valley, but it never caught on."

Tourists often zip through this Valhalla of the carefree without even knowing it.

"Used to be a highway sign here saying 'Loafer's Glory,' explained Burleson, "but it rotted and fell down, and nobody thought to put a new one up. I was born here in the same house my daddy was. He was 86 when he passed away in 1947, and the town lost its last good whittler. I don't whittle myself."

LOAFER'S GLORY met its greatest disaster in a flood of May, 1901.

"It was a big flood," said Burleson. "Five buildings—the general store, too—were washed away, and one man had to tie his wagon to a tree to keep it from being washed away."

Burleson, a former master sergeant, is now retired after serving through three wars during a total of 22 in-and-out years with Uncle Sam's armed forces. "Although I was in six branches of the service trying to find the best one to loaf in," he said, and then, his eyes twinkling, he drawled:

"The rest of the people here are hard-working tobacco farmers. I'm the only real loafer left."

"Oh, you wet a fishhook in the creek now and then," objected Fred Garland, proprietor of the new general store which stocks everything from snuff to overalls.

Garland is the unofficial president of the Chamber of Commerce, and is determined to put Loafer's Glory back on the map. He is after the highway department to put up a new sign. He has just paid out $5 apiece for two old hemlock benches from a remodeled church which he plans to put in front of his store to welcome all serious loafers.

"I'll provide free wood for the whittlers," he said, "but I'll have to charge them for the knives."

It may take Loafer's Glory a long time to overtake New York—it doesn't even have a subway yet—but no one is in a real hurry. That's the nice thing about Loafer's Glory. Plus the fact there isn't a town in America with a better sense of humor.

Get That Homework

Colleges Tightening Up on Entrance Requirements

By Jack V. Fox

NEW YORK, May 19 (UP).

IF YOU want your boy or girl to go to college, you better lay down the law right now to get at that homework.

The squeeze on getting into American colleges and universities now is the tightest at any time except the year right after the war when thousands of veterans went back to classrooms. And it's going to get worse.

The time is long since past when a father's ability to pay the fraternity bills and the upkeep of a flivver was the main requirement for getting a not-too-bright son out of his hair and onto the campus.

It's grades that count now and while an affluent family can usually find some small sectional college for their progeny, the top schools will skim off the scholastic cream of the high schools. Without good scholarship, the high school graduate finds it exceedingly hard to get into the college of his choice.

YALE HAS four applicants for every student admitted. Harvard already has 3800 applications for next September, but only 1100 freshmen will be enrolled. Huge U.C.L.A. says it will take any student who can meet the standard — but the standard is a "B" average in high school.

Georgia Tech has an application-admission ratio of 2 to 1. Northwestern takes only about 25 to 35 per cent of applicants and says the situation will get tighter. Southern Methodist turns away only a tiny percentage but that's because its requirements are high and it makes a great effort to let high school students know it.

The situation for girls is tough, too. Exclusive schools such as Wellesley have small freshmen classes—470 at Wellesley—and keep them that way. The other "female Ivy League" colleges of Barnard, Bryn Mawr, Mount Holyoke, Radcliffe, Smith and Vassar, won't reveal the ratio of applicants to admissions but it is lopsided.

DAD, YOU HAD BETTER LAY DOWN THE LAW RIGHT NOW.

HOW DID the squeeze come about? It's pretty simple—more children and particularly more children financially able to go to college in these degree-conscious days. Creation and expansion of high institutions of learning has not kept pace.

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare reports that high school graduates in 1939, the last year figures were compiled before the war, totaled 1,174,163 and college enrollments that fall were 417,500. Last year the high school crop was 1,399,300 and college enrollments were 682,639.

Veterans still make up a considerable part of college classes. Georgia Tech reports veterans constitute roughly 18-20 per cent of the student body.

The Wall Street Journal reports that colleges are launching the biggest building boom ever—some $750,000,000 a year on new laboratories, classrooms, libraries, fieldhouses and dormitories. But it quotes a top educator: "You can buy bricks but you can't buy trained personnel."

CLARENCE E. LOVEJOY, a New York educational consultant and former Rutgers faculty member, says bluntly, "We are in an awful mess."

"There are some 2100 colleges in the United States and there are not likely to be many new ones started. You don't just sit down and decide to open a college or university.

"There are about 3,000,000 students in college today. There should be 5,000,000 10 years from now."

Lovejoy recommends that all colleges use all 52 weeks of the year instead of breaking for summer. He also advocates teaching in shifts such as crowded high schools do.

He advises high school graduates to apply to as many as six colleges and to do it in the fall of their graduation year. To parents he recommends cracking down on their children about grades in the seventh or eighth grade.

Bach on Multiple Keyboards

By Thomas B. Sherman

THE Bach Concertos for three and four pianos are, for obvious reasons, the least played and the least known of his keyboard works. A recording which offers the concertos in C Major and D Minor for three pianos and orchestra and the A Minor concerto for four pianos and orchestra is therefore both novel and intrinsically interesting for these are truly representative works. The concerto for four pianos was adapted from Vivaldi's concerto for four violins and, except for the change of key and timbre, is virtually identical with its prototype in the first and third movements. The slow movement has been subjected to a few notational changes.

Pianists for these works are Gisele Kuhn, Georgette Astorg, Livia Rev and Monique Mercier with L'Orchestre du Theatre des Champs Elysees directed by Arthur Goldschmidt. All performances are incisive and strong in rhythmic propulsion. The piano, of course, was not Bach's instrument. These works were composed for harpsichord. (London, Ducret-Thomson, One 12-inch LP in album.)

OPERA: A recording of Borodin's opera "Prince Igor" by principals, chorus and orchestra from the National Opera at Belgrade gives the listener a good idea of its qualities even though the singers are not first-class. The music has an exotic coloring and at times—such as in the love scenes between the young Prince Vladimir and the Khan's daughter—is strikingly melodious. The episodic story, however, is weak and inconsequential. One suspects that the opera would not hold a place even in the repertory of Yugoslavian and Russian theaters if it weren't for the "Polovetzian Dances." Superior performers in the cast are the baritone, Dushan Popovitch, who plays the name role and the tenor Noni Zhuentz as young Vladimir. The conductor is Oscar Danon. Reproduction is satisfactory. (London, Five 12-inch LPs in album.)

ORCHESTRAL: THE NBC Orchestra under Arturo Toscanini gives typically crisp, strongly driven and vivid performances in Kodaly's "Hary Janos" suite and Respighi's "Feste Romana." The Respighi piece is pictorial stuff in the style of the "Pines of Rome" but not as good. "Hary Janos" however is bright, humorous, lyrical and communicative. It reflects the story and character of the boastful "Hary Janos" and is high in musical value at the same time. The reproduction is generally brilliant in sound. (RCA-Victor, One 12-Inch LP.)

VIOLIN: The 20-year-old American violinist, Michael Rabin, has demonstrated a technical virtuosity in many previous recordings. Now his performance of the Bach Sonata No. 5 for unaccompanied violin shows a growing maturity of conception. This sonata is more important for its architecture than its emotional expressiveness and if played without a proper conception of phraseological make-up and time values it could be an unmitigated bore. Rabin produces a beautiful sound, a clean definition of every note and a clear, imposing design. His performances of two less interesting sonatas by Ysaye, on the reverse side, are equally impressive in their mastery of the instrument. (Angel, One 12-inch LP.)

PIANO: Schubert's Piano Sonata in A Major, Opus, 120, holds one in a mild euphoria by reason of its sunny lyricism; the sonata in B Flat Major (posthumous) is deeper, more searching and lyrical as well. Paul Badura-Skoda stays on the surface in his performance of the B Flat Major; but he is completely ingratiating in the A Major. He is always at his best where delicacy of feeling is paramount and no great assertion of power is required. The reproduction is excellent, compared with the usual sound of the piano on recordings. (Westminster, One 12-inch LP.)

'CELLO AND ORCHESTRA: Andre Navarra is a shade too refined in his treatment of Ernest Bloch's "Schelomo," a piece which is supposed to be emotionally untrammeled if not convulsive. Sound is beautiful, and artistic discrimination is abundantly evident. He plays with the London Symphony Orchestra conducted by Richard Austin. Navarra's elegance of style is perfect for Tschaikowsky's "Variations on a Rococo Theme." He gives it a distinction that could be easily lost by a mere tune-chaser. (Westminster, One 12-inch LP.)

BEST SELLERS: Beethoven's Nine Symphonies, played by the NBC Orchestra, Arturo Toscanini conducting. (RCA-Victor, Seven 12-inch LPs in a new package;) Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto and Mozart's Violin Concerto No. 4, played by David Oistrakh and the Philadelphia Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy conducting. (Columbia, One 12-inch LP.)

At the Movies

By Myles Standish

THE MAN WHO KNEW TOO MUCH—The old master of suspense, Director Alfred Hitchcock, has surpassed himself. He wickedly prolongs an agony of uncertainty and unbearable tension in a couple of scenes in a bizarre tale of how an American couple and their child become key figures in a plot to assassinate a prime minister in London. Convincingly played by James Stewart, Doris Day, Daniel Gelin, Brenda de Banzie and Bernard Miles. So exciting one forgives the holes in logic in John Michael Hayes's clever script. In VistaVision. ST. LOUIS.

SVENGALI—George du Maurier's romantic old novel about the hypnotist who casts a spell over a Paris artists' model and makes her a great singer has been dusted off for its fourth filming. This English production is exceptionally well done, with exquisite color and composition and good performances by Hildegarde Neff as Trilby and Donald Wolfit as Svengali. PAGEANT.

SLIGHTLY SCARLET—Two gorgeous redheads, Arlene Dahl and Rhonda Fleming, adorn an otherwise routine crime-politics meller in Superscope. Taken from a James M. Cain novel, it has John Payne, who plays both ends against the middle in backing a reform mayor, double-crossing a gang lord and starting his own gambling syndicate. He ends up, understandably, full of lead. LOEW'S STATE.

COMANCHE—Lots of Indians and cavalry in this CinemaScope account of attempts to make peace with the Comanches, but it is loaded with cliches about scouts who boss the confused officers, the noble red chief, the pig-headed commissioner for Indian affairs, ambuscades, etc. With Dana Andrews. ORPHEUM.

WORLD WITHOUT END—Four space ship scientists who crash the "time barrier" and find themselves back on earth in the year 2508 to find the remnants of an atomic Armageddon. But imagination peters out quickly and is lamely done. With Hugh Marlowe. FOX.

FANFAN THE TULIP—This impudent French spoof of swashbuckling is gay, witty and occasionally ribald. Gerard Philipe plays an audacious amorous rogue for laughs and Gina Lollobrigida is cute as a sergeant's daughter who slaps the face of Louis XV. English subtitles. SHADY OAK.

CITIZEN KANE—Reissue of Orson Welles 1941 theatrical depiction of a ruthless newspaper giant, which is probably best remembered for its advancements in focus in depth technique. RICHMOND.

CHEAPER BY THE DOZEN and BELLES ON THEIR TOES—Reissues of two sentimental films about the Gilbreth family with its 12 children. The first (1950) is handled deftly, with Clifton Webb making a lovable, eccentric old duck of papa, with just a dash of astringency. The second (1952) is warmed-over hash, with Mr. Webb missing. Myrna Loy and Jeanne Crain are in both. MISSOURI.

SEVEN WONDERS OF THE WORLD—The third Cinerama production is a trite, haphazard travelogue. AMBASSADOR.

AFTER A FIVE-YEAR SEARCH FOR A CAPTURED WHITE GIRL (NATALIE WOOD, LEFT) JOHN WAYNE AND JEFFREY HUNTER FIND HER AMONG THE COMANCHES, BUT SHE REFUSES TO GIVE UP HER INDIAN LIFE. IT IS IN JOHN FORD'S "THE SEARCHERS," NEXT AT THE FOX.

Art and Artists

Teaching Finances Artists

By William K. Wyant Jr.

THERE are great and ennobling rewards in the life of an artist, but most of them are not negotiable. They cannot be hocked or used to buy things at the grocery store. A survey in the 1940s indicated that the average annual income of professional artists in the United States was $14, which works out to about 5 cents a day.

If the statistics developed by Elizabeth McCausland in 1947 are applicable now, the inflation factor brings the artist's daily income to 10 or 15 cents, still not a princely sum. The vast majority of artists, now as in the past, teach or do other types of work to earn their living. Serious art has to be a kind of sideline with them.

The last few decades in this country have brought a widening of opportunities for teaching art, so that it is not too difficult for a man of talent and purpose to make a bread-winning connection that will not stifle his creative impulses. The number of art shows has greatly increased, too, so that an artist has more chances to exhibit his work.

EVEN SO, most painters cannot expect to eat nearly as high on the hog as bank presidents, store clerks and carpenters. Only a few in St. Louis have achieved a status where they either do or could, if they wished, make a comfortable living independent of teaching.

Established and successful painters often consider teaching a logical, necessary adjunct to their work as individuals, while those seeking recognition need such work to get along. Washington University School of Fine Arts offers haven to both, with the result that students have contact with a staff of active, producing artists.

Dean Kenneth E. Hudson strives for an atmosphere that will attract promising, serious young painters to the faculty. Teaching duties are kept to a maximum of 18 hours, or three days a week, and administrative burdens are held to the minimum. The result is that teachers have time to follow their own bents, and they are free to do so. Salaries start at about $3500 and range upwards to about $8000.

UNDER OPTIMUM conditions, after years of study and training at the best academies, the artist is apt to find very few cash customers around. A good example of this, ready to hand, is the case of Warren Spaulding, a promising young painter in his thirties, who teaches at the School of Fine Arts. His one-man show at the Artists Guild closed last week.

Spaulding has an excellent academic background and has won more than his share of awards. He spent five years at Massachusetts School of Art in Boston, put in four with an anti-aircraft unit in the Pacific, seeing combat on Guadalcanal, and after the war took two degrees in three years at the Yale School of Fine Arts. He then got a fellowship and went abroad for a while.

HAVING HAD plenty of time to think things out during his stretch in the islands, Spaulding emerged from the war with corporal's stripes and the determination that he would be an artist, come what might. He did not expect that he would make a million dollars, and he certainly has not.

In 1951, he came to the School of Fine Arts here at $3500 after rejecting the deanship of the Minneapolis School of Art, a post that would have paid $8000. He chose St. Louis because he would have time to paint, and he does not regret the decision. His salary still is under $5000.

Spaulding has more room to paint now because he and his wife recently moved from one of the campus prefabricated houses to a house at 6806 Pershing avenue, where he is remodeling the garage as a studio. Practically all the works in the Artists Guild exhibit, some of them quite large, were painted in a space six by 12 feet in the prefab.

IF ARTISTS ARE going to get anywhere, they have to exhibit what they have produced, and this costs money. A good crate for a painting might cost $12 and express charges another $6. Spaulding's one-man show at the Guild left him about $300 out of pocket for refreshments, printing of invitations, postage and the like.

Spaulding sold a $25 drawing to a St. Louisan and a $150 painting to friends in Chicago. About 100 persons attended the opening reception. For a second reception last Sunday, the artist and his wife mailed invitations to the entire roster of a group of St. Louisans who might logically be assumed to be interested in art. Fewer than a dozen persons showed up. It was a very warm afternoon.

Jack Hawkins Star in 'River Kwai'

HOLLYWOOD, May 19—Jack Hawkins, the English movie star, will portray the leader of the British commando force in "The Bridge Over the River Kwai." Sam Spiegel, the producer, earlier signed Charles Laughton to be the Colonel Blimp-type commanding officer captured by the Japanese and compelled to assist the enemy by building a bridge. Two American actors remain to be engaged for other lead roles in the picture. David Lean, the director, is due to arrive tomorrow in Ceylon to supervise start of construction work on a functional bridge which will be dynamited as a train passes over it at a critical point in the drama. Actual filming of the story is scheduled to start Sept. 15.

Recipes for Molasses Cake, Pie

By Edith M. Barber

The other day when my grocery order arrived I was reminded, as I often am, of the contrast in food handling that has occurred in the last half century.

Molasses, for instance, in glass containers with screw tops, is so convenient, as it cannot only be poured into the measuring cup, but the jar or bottle can be easily wiped with a damp cloth before it is returned to the pantry shelf.

The adjective "sticky" was always associated with this product when it came in a cask to the grocery store. Originally the buyer brought a pail to the shop for transporting her purchase. Then the grocer began to supply paper buckets with wire handles. These did not have covers and it was a sticky matter to take them to the home kitchen.

There have been as radical changes in the product itself as in past days it was not consistent in flavor. Two types of molasses could be designated, dark and light. The former was often the blackstrap variety, slightly bitter and less sweet than the other that was sometimes called New Orleans molasses.

LIGHT MOLASSES CAKE: Two cups sifted flour, one teaspoon baking powder, one-half teaspoon baking soda, one-half teaspoon salt, one teaspoon ginger, one teaspoon cinnamon, one-quarter cup shortening, one-half cup sugar, one egg, one-half cup molasses, three-quarters cup buttermilk.

Mix and sift flour, baking powder, soda, salt and spices. Cream shortening, add sugar slowly, and cream until fluffy. Stir in well-beaten egg and molasses. Add sifted dry ingredients alternately with milk, stirring well after each addition. Bake in one greased eight-inch square pan in moderate over (350 degrees Fahrenheit) 45 minutes or in muffin pans 30 minutes. Serve hot, plain or with whipped cream. Yield: One square.

MOLASSES SHOO-FLY PIE: Pastry: One cup brown sugar, one-half cup molasses, one tablespoon flour, two tablespoons melted butter, one-eighth teaspoon salt, two eggs, unbeaten.

Line pie pan with pastry and prick with fork. Combine remaining ingredients and mix thoroughly. Pour into pie shell and bake in hot over (450 degrees Fahrenheit) 10 minutes. Continue baking in a slow oven about 20 minutes until filling has set. Yield: One nine-inch pie.

Small Fry Favorite

Small fry love orange juice poured over fruit sherbet and served in pretty glasses with straws.

Sports Events on Radio This Week

BOXING bouts on radio this week: Heavyweights Johnny Summerlin and Bob Satterfield, 9:05 p.m. Wednesday on KXOK; middleweights Charles Humez and Gene Fullmer, 9 p.m. Friday on KSD.

St. Louis Cardinal games on KMOX this week: Against New York (double-header), 12:55 p.m. today; New York, 12:25 p.m. tomorrow; Pittsburgh, 7:10 p.m. Tuesday and Wednesday; Chicago, 7:55 Friday and 1:55 p.m. Saturday.

KXOK at 5:30 p.m. today and Saturday will carry reports on the time trials for the 500-mile Indianapolis Speedway race to be run May 30.

Hamburgers With Tomato Sauce

Ingredients: One pound ground beef, one medium-sized onion, one tablespoon fat, salt and pepper, 1 can (10¾ ounces) spaghetti sauce with mushrooms (meatless), two tablespoons cooking sherry.

Method: Make eight thin flat oval patties of the beef. Cut four very thin round slices from the middle of the onion, do not separate into rings. Place an onion slice in the center of four of the patties; press edges together well. Heat fat in 10-inch skillet; brown patties quickly on both sides, sprinkling them with salt and pepper; turn heat low and cook to desired doneness, turning as necessary. Pour off fat from skillet, but leave browned particles. Add spaghetti sauce to skillet; heat slowly, scraping up browned particles from bottom of skillet with wooden spoon. Stir in sherry. Makes four servings.

Note: Tightly wrap the part of the onion not used in waxed paper and store in refrigerator crisper for other use.

Fine Flavor

A little dried crushed oregano gives fine flavor to hamburger meat.

Breaded Veal Cutlets

You'll need one egg (slightly beaten) and about a third cup of fine dry bread crumbs for breading a pound of veal cutlet.

Artichoke Idea

Tuck slivers of garlic among the leaves at the heart of an artichoke, then cook in salted boiling water as usual.

Television in Review

Censorship Problem

By John Crosby

NEW YORK, May 19.

TELEVISION, you may have noticed, is a good deal more liberal about censorship than the movies. Narcotics addiction, for instance, which the movie code lists as an unacceptable subject whose very mention should be avoided, was dealt with on television years before Otto Preminger flew in the face of the production code with "The Man With the Golden Arm."

When Jack Webb made his first movie "Dragnet," his television show had already done 13 scripts dealing with some phase of the narcotics problem. He wanted to put some of this in his feature-length movie and was turned down on the grounds that once the door was opened, others would want to deal with the problem and perhaps not do it so carefully. NBC's code requires only that narcotics be treated as a vicious habit and that its effects not be shown in sensational detail.

GRACE JOHNSEN, chief censor at ABC, says that television is dealing with more adult subjects now than when she started in 1947. In the early days there were dramas that were considered unadaptable for TV. Now, they'll try almost anything. I'm not at all sure "Dodsworth," in which infidelity is so thoroughly imbedded that you can hardly take it out, would have been done eight or nine years ago. It was done recently and very well done. In the area of sex, there has been a loosening of the reins.

To review all the material that goes on the screen, Miss Johnsen has nine editors under her in New York, two in Detroit, two in Chicago, four in San Francisco and nine in Hollywood. Their standards come from ABC's policy book, which is largely based on the network's experience in radio, and on the code of the National Association of Radio and television broadcasters. Still, an editor has to use common sense. Alcoholism and mental illness, once treated as jokes, are now treated as social problems. Racial stereotyping, which was once commonplace, is now avoided.

PROFANITY is something that is usually deleted without even asking the writer unless it's in a war scene or has some good reason for being there. Kraft, for instance, lets a few "damns" and "hells" slip through even when it isn't war. There are always a few squawks but people are getting a little more wordly—largely due to television. When ballet first was shown on television, people wrote denouncing it as obscene. Now, it's accepted as culture—though not necessarily to everyone's taste.

JACK WEBB . . . MORE LIBERAL VIEWPOINT ON TV.

A fairly large censorship problem exists at ABC now because they are showing many British films and the British are considerably more liberal than we are. British films contain more profanity than ours. It all has to come out.

For children's shows, ABC has a number of special rules. You must never kill a domestic animal or show stuttering (kids may imitate it), show snakes in dramatic shows (okay for zoos); you must watch family relationships carefully, and eliminate the gory and violent (though, goodness knows, there still seems to be plenty of that around).

SCREENING old western films and cartoons, Miss Johnsen has come across some hair-raising ones that had to be thrown out in their entirety. The cartoons are prone to stereotyping. In one a group of Boy Scouts all talked with racial dialect—a little Chinese boy, for example, talking in singsong English. This had to go.

You may think your kids are absorbing entirely too much violence; but here are a couple of things they won't see: An Indian killing a boy and then watching his body burn as he plays a harmonica; a man staked to the ground while ants eat him alive. You might have seen those scenes in movie houses when you were a child, but your own children won't get to see them on television.

'My Opinion'

Boy, 17, Is Restless, Short of Money

By Martha Carr

Dear Martha:

I AM a boy of 17, a high school senior, and am practically going steady with a girl who is also a senior. The problem, Martha, is that I don't have any money. Don't say get a job because I have been looking for a job since September and no one wants one for part-time work. Also, they won't take on a boy who is nearly old enough for the draft. To top it all off my girl pays for practically everything we do and it's making me sick. I tried asking my parents for money but they tell me to get a job. I know they can afford to give me an allowance. Another thing is the car. Dad uses it all day and then it sits in front of the house all night. He gives me the car very seldom even though he let me get a license. I hope you can answer this for us. It is so confusing and the more I think of it, the madder I get. P. D.

I realize that teen-age boys, subject to the draft, do face a very real problem in trying to find work, but there are many boys your age who are employed in part-time jobs and I believe with some help from your school guidance officials you can learn of work opportunities that haven't occurred to you. I don't think the girl should be paying your way as well as hers on a date, although when a boy doesn't have much money, many girls would prefer to go Dutch than to stay home. But do you have to plan expensive date? Forgive me if I sound old-fashioned and stuffy, but wouldn't a walk on a summer evening or a picnic be just as much fun as an expensive date out on the town?

Dear Martha:

● ARE CHILDREN OBLIGATED to their parents forever? From the time I was old enough to remember I have been obligated to mine. At the age of 14 I quit school to get a job because there never was enough money and my mother was too proud to go out and work. I couldn't listen to the arguments about money any longer and thought what I would earn would eliminate all of this but it didn't. All my life—and I am now a grandmother—this has been a disease in my family. I am still helping financially and am just about fed up. My mother would always complain about not being able to afford this and that, then when I went to see her she would have some new clothes, more than she actually needed, or a new piece of furniture. If I said anything she would start to cry. I am getting to the point where I don't want to see them because they are always complaining about not having enough. I myself have plenty but it's through hard work and saving that I can be independent. Do you or your readers have any solution or comfort for my disturbed thought? GENEROUS.

This is an extremely difficult question and it recurs with each generation. It seems to me that every child is obligated to honor his parents and his parents, in turn, have an obligation to release that child from the chains of possessiveness. In the course of a family's life, the pendulum suddenly turns, often placing the parent in the role of dependent, the child as holder of the pursestrings. When that happens, the child must be as thoughtful and considerate, as kind and generous as his parents were to him, giving them back the love that they lavished on him as a baby and on through his adolescent years when he leaned on them for support and guidance. But just as I believe a parent is wrong in slavishly spoiling a child, so the son or daughter is wrong to be a slave. Neither has the right to demand that of the other. So, it seems to me that in your case you should sit down with your parents, figure out just how much they need—and be generous enough so they won't feel like paupers—then encourage them to stick to a budget rather than keep doling out to them to silence their complaints and tears. It requires maturity, gentleness and willingness on the part of both to give and take, but the problem can be solved.

Dear Martha:

● I DON'T KNOW what to do about my husband who is stationed overseas. We have a small baby and I have been really struggling to get along on his allotment, accepting help from my family but none from him or his family. Yet he has money enough to buy me expensive gifts and send his mother money to save because he is afraid I'll waste it. He also sends very expensive presents to his family at Christmas, birthdays, etc., but never considers my family at all. He has bought two presents, one for his mother and one for me, which he decided he didn't like and which he threw away to buy new ones. Recently, he spent $15 for a pin for his grandmother, an invalid, when she could better have used more practical things. Also, I have just received a $12 repair bill on an appliance. My parents will pay this bill. He doesn't think it's reasonable that I should say anything about this. He merely says, "If you have any more complaints, wait until I get home." I'm fed up with his uphill struggle from my husband. It never enters his head that he isn't right or that I deserve any respect or consideration.

From your letter, I assume that your husband is a totally impractical person — but one who loves his wife and his mother and thinks enough of his grandmother to buy her a lovely pin she never would have purchased for herself. I grant you that he seems dreadfully extravagant and I don't blame you at all for wanting to have the necessities of life before you throw money away on luxuries, but the fact that he wants to buy handsome gifts for those he loves indicates that he is an extremely generous person. Don't stifle that generosity with constant complaints. On the other hand, you and the baby have a right to sufficient funds for your welfare and comfort and it may be that with wiser budgeting you can make the allotment stretch further. My suggestion is to seek help either through Family or Children's Service or the American Red Cross where you can analyze the entire financial problem. If there just isn't enough for you and the baby, that matter must be straightened out. But be careful not to spoil your marriage by pinching pennies too tightly.

Martha Carr is glad to answer your problems. If you wish a personal reply, please inclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope. She cannot answer questions of a medical or legal nature.

Quality Cottons Have Place in Season's Styles

Woman's Entire Summer Wardrobe, Both Elaborate and Tailored, May Now Be Created in These Fibers

BEN REIG, WINNER OF THE NATIONAL COTTON AWARD, CREATED THIS GOOD - LOOKING TUCKED ORGANDY GARDEN PARTY DRESS.

FULL-BLOWN WARP PRINTED ROSES APPEAR ON A WHITE COTTON DRESS DESIGNED BY FIRA BENENSON. NECKLINE HAS LARGE ROSE APPLIQUE.

A BLACK LUSTER COTTON SHIRTWAIST DRESS BY MOLLIE PARNIS HAS BLACK AND WHITE STRIPED PIQUE COLLAR, BOW AND CUFFS.

TWO-PIECE TOWN DRESS BY ADELE SIMPSON IS OF COOL LOOKING BROWN AND WHITE SHEER SUPIMA COTTON MATERIAL.

A DARK TOWN DRESS BY PAULINE TRIGERE IS MADE OF MINT GREEN AND BLACK STRIPED COTTON TO ACCENTUATE SLIM LINES.

By Sylvia Stiles

IN AN ERA when new textures and weaves dominate the apparel industry and when man-made fibers glitter with a mad-money emphasis, old favorites are capable of inspiring the couture designers to win fashion honors.

This was demonstrated last week when the annual Cotton Fashion Award went to New York designer, Ben Reig, who chose dainty pink organdy for his leading fabric and a long-skirted, shirtwaist dress of the garden-party type for his prize-winning theme. This designer, noted for the very feminine, lady-like clothes that have a distinctive elegance further proved that the past is equally as good as the present from a decorative standpoint. Tucks, for example, looked so arresting after being little used for many seasons, that they overshadowed novel trimmings. As used by the Reig talent, tiny ones were arranged vertically on the bib front of the shirtwaist in contrast to the horizontal ones at the midriff while billowy skirt had wide panels of graduated tucks from waistline to hemline.

The Cotton Fashion Award, established in 1953, and given as the crowning event of the annual observance of cotton week throughout the nation inspires the designers to do as much for this American product as they do for silks, woolens and synthetics. It was presented this year at Gracie Mansion, New York's official mansion for its mayor. Previous awards have been made in Washington.

Although the tucked organdy shirtwaist dress was the most significant in the Reig collection, there were variations of his restrained, ultra-sophisticated use of cotton fabrics that ranged from a slim cotton twill street costume to flowered party dresses. The vogue of the flowered materials was expressed by bright floral motifs that looked as if they were hand-painted on white cotton faille and were made into short-skirted dance dresses with long-torso lines. A high-waisted dress patterned with lavendar and pink sweet peas introduced a high bodice yoke edged with pink velvet ribbon that fastened with a bow at the back. Popularity of red for summer was seen in a red and white striped cotton satin dress in the design of which the stripes were arranged in a chevron pattern.

Interesting ways in which other leading designers are using cottons were emphasized by a collection of "Blue Ribbon Cottons" in this same display. Numerous textured fabrics appeared. Among these was a cotton brocade suit in a Wedgwood blue shade. The work of Ben Zuckerman, this suit has a semi-fitted jacket that is collarless. Gray cotton damask was selected by Herbert Sondheim for a tailored day dress with a square collared bodice edged with white pique. Skirt has a bell-shaped fullness.

Calico, once the mainstay of American materials, need not be treated in a drab or conventional manner, as illustrated by a summer suit by Branell. The skirt is full and permanently pleated, and the short jacket fitted like an old-fashioned basque. Checked gingham, another favorite of yesterday, is being revived this season for dresses that have a party emphasis. Mollie Parnis demonstrated how attractive the checked fabric can be in the design of a sleeveless dress in red and white checks. The skirt has a whirl of unpressed pleats and the bodice, bow-trimmed at the front, extends to a low V at the back. This designer's indorsement of red for summer also is apparent in her lipstick red chiffon dress with bodice gathered like a smock, and the skirt very full.

Tablecloth damask has joined chintz in proving that household fabrics are equally as impressive for apparel. Outstanding in this group was Tina Leser's ballerina length bathing suit. This suit repeats the successes of damask skirts in red and white block designs and beach jackets of the same material. For striking results, Karen Stark combined black eyelet embroidery and nude shaded net to create an unusual short evening dress.

This launching of quality cottons for the current season indicates that a woman's entire wardrobe now may be created of these American-grown fibers. The most elaborate of evening dresses made of jeweled pique or satin-trimmed organdy as well as the most tailored of travel and street suits have the couture designers' indorsement.

Bleaching of White Linen Tablecloth

By Dorothy Brainerd

FROM Mattoon, Ill., Mrs. R. T. sends a card which reads: "I have a white linen tablecloth that has turned yellow from being stored away. Can you tell me how to whiten it?"

There are three things which you might try, Mrs. T., in the following order. First, dampen the cloth and hang it in the sun or spread on the grass to dry. If that doesn't work use a commercial chlorine bleach according to manufacturer's directions. (And please re-read those last four words.) If that still doesn't do the job, try a strong bleach such as Javelle water.

Because there is such wide misuse of commercial bleaches with resultant problems, we think the following information from Home Management Economist Louise Woodruff of the extension service of the University of Missouri is so excellent that every homemaker would be wise to clip it and keep it on record for future reference.

"Chlorine bleaches, when used according to manufacturer's directions, are always safe on white cottons or linens that do not have a 'permanent' finish. Chlorine bleaches are more effective on white cotton and linen than are sodium perborate bleaches. Sodium perborate bleaches are recommended for all fabrics, including colored fabrics and materials other than cotton or linen.

"Repeated applications of chlorine bleach may be used if the first one does not whiten the cloth satisfactorily. It is never desirable to increase the quantity of bleach used at one time or to bleach fabrics for a longer time than recommended by the manufacturer. Overuse of bleach is likely to weaken any fabric. All bleached fabrics should be thoroughly rinsed. Excess bleach left in the fabric may cause it to yellow when it is ironed.

"In using bleaches it always is important to remember that chlorine bleaches should never be used on fabrics that have been resin-treated for special or permanent finishes. That means that chlorine bleaches are not safe for fabrics that are treated for crease resistance or have no-iron, glazed, embossed or similar finishes. The chlorine bleach reacts chemically with such finishes, causing yellow stains.

"Chlorine bleaches also should not be used with detergents that contain fluorescent dyes. These detergents are advertised as having special whitening effects when used for general laundry."

You will note, Mrs. T., that chlorine bleaches should not be used on linens which are advertised as being crease resistant. However, I doubt that the old yellowed tablecloth would have any of the relatively permanent finishes.

MRS. N.E.M. recently bought a home which is 12 years old. "Evidently the screens were not properly cared for," she writes. "We were going to paint them, but in the cleaning process find that they are bronze. Do you know of anything that will restore the bronze finish?"

As you know, bronze will turn green with age. When the screens have oxidized very probably marks will come off on the walls of your home and cause unsightly green mars if you simply restore the bronze finish.

I would suggest that you clean the screens thoroughly with turpentine. Then get some spar waterproof varnish and thin it down about 20 per cent with turpentine, and paint the screens with that to keep them from oxidizing.

MRS. E.J. OF WATERLOO, ILL. wants to know what causes an angel food cake to shrink away from the sides of the pan and also to fall when it is taken from the pan.

"Is it too high or too low a temperature?" she asks.

There are several things that might cause this trouble. Perhaps the temperature is not to blame. Could be that the eggs were not beaten stiff enough. Or when you added the sugar, you may not have mixed the mixture long enough for the eggs to become thoroughly absorbed. Or you may be taking the cake out of the oven before it is completely baked; if the egg whites are not thoroughly "set" they might drop.

MRS. W. H. wants to know how to remove scorch from the collar of a new linen shirt.

A new linen shirt? Sounds as though family discord may have followed such an accident. If so, let's hope these suggestions restore unity.

If the scorch is light, it may be removed by sponging with hydrogen peroxide to which sodium perborate has been added (one teaspoon sodium perborate to one pint peroxide). Rinse well with water.

For more severe scorch, dampen a white cotton cloth with the peroxide and lay it on the stain. Cover with a clean dry cloth; then press with a medium warm iron. If the hydrogen peroxide soaks through the top cloth, replace with a dry one. Ironing directly on the cloth moistened with the peroxide or on the dampened stain itself, after the cloth has been removed, may cause rust stains on the garment. Repeat the treatment until the stain is completely removed. Rinse well. And don't try this on any colored shirts, should you have the problem again.

Any homemaking problems bothering you? If so, write to Dorothy Brainerd in care of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. She will answer your questions or publish them and see if other readers have the answers for you.

Bob Thomas Satirical Novel to Be Filmed

HOLLYWOOD, May 19 — Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is in the mood to go behind-the-scenes again in Hollywood as it did three years ago in making "The Bad and the Beautiful." The studio now has acquired rights to "Spectacular," an unpublished first novel by Bob Thomas, associated press Hollywood correspondent. The studio describes the story as being a drama with satirical overtones about a fabulous movie producer who is the subject of a 90-minute television tribute. Metro's production chief, Dore Schary, was, by the way, recently surprised to find himself the object of a 30-minute TV tribute on the "This Is Your Life" program.

SIZES
14½—24½

by Anne Adams

Half-sizers! Look so smart in this bright and breezy style. No side opening! Just unbutton shoulders—slip it on 1-2-3 quick! Make several in a jiffy in tubbable cottons.

Pattern 4523: Half sizes 14½, 16½, 18½, 20½, 22½, 24½. Size 16½ requires 4⅝ yards 35-inch.

Send 35 cents (coins) for this pattern—add 5 cents for each pattern for first-class mailing. Send to Anne Adams, care of St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Pattern Department, P.O. Box 121, Old Chelsea Station, New York 11, with zone; size and style number. Print your name, address N.Y.

4820 12—20

by Anne Adams

These separates are wonderful for a busy gal's wardrobe—they mix-match beautifully. Blouse with its graceful yokes, slim shorts, favorite 8-gore side button skirt.

Pattern 4820: Misses' sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20. Size 16 blouse and shorts take 3⅛ yards 35-inch fabric; skirt takes 3¼ yards.

Red Fashionable Summer Color

RED is one of the most fashionable shades for summer wear. Combined either with black or white, it introduces a gay note to the wardrobe that contributes a flattering contrast to the many pastel and neutral tones usually associated with warm-weather apparel.

Noteworthy among the red dresses on display in the stores are those made of sheer materials. Cotton voile, for example, is featured extensively. Red and white striped cotton broadcloth is used for some of the simple shirtwaist dresses which are increasing in number. For evening, there are both long and short evening dresses made of red chiffon and organza.

Tailored cottons combining red and black in striped or novelty dotted patterns are of interest. A sheath dress of red cotton striped with a tiny thread of black adds black cotton bias trimming at the high waistline. There also is a binding of the black fabric on the collar and cuffs while bows of the same material contribute additional decoration at neckline and cuffs.

The coat made of lightweight red woolen is regarded as one of the most practical for wear during the summer as well as during other seasons because it blends harmoniously with so many different shades. It looks well with black or navy blue as well as with white and most pastel tints.

Give a slice of ham superb new flavor: rub a thick slice of ham with a paste made of brown sugar and prepared mustard. Cover with barbecue sauce in a shallow baking pan, and bake until golden brown.

Hollywood Briefs

HOLLYWOOD, May 19—Mitzi Gayner will co-star as an American ballerina with Gene Kelly and Leslie Caron in "Les Girls." Sol C. Siegel will produce the picture independently for Metro release. The story deals with three ballerinas, American, French and English, touring Europe with their manager, who will be played by Mr. Kelly. The producer has yet to select the English dancer. . . . Mona Freeman and Dennis O'Keefe will join Barry Sullivan as co-stars of "Massacre at Dragoon Wells," to be produced by Lindsley Parsons for Allied Artists release. . . . Jo Van Fleet will appear as the mother-in-law of the four leading ladies in "The King and Four Queens," starring Clark Gable. Miss Van Fleet won the best actress supporting performance "Oscar" for her acting as the mother in "East of Eden" last year. "The King and Four Queens" starts shooting May 21 on location in Utah. . . . Nicole Maurey, French actress now in New York, will be brought to Hollywood next week by R.K.O. to be tested for the lead in "Underdog," which Stanley Rubin will produce.

Baked Corned Beef & Cabbage

Ingredients: Two tablespoons butter or margarine, two tablespoons flour, one teaspoon salt, one-half teaspoon dry mustard, one and one-half cups milk, one tablespoon cider vinegar, one teaspoon kitchen bouquet, four cups finely shredded cabbage (pack down), one-half pound cooked corned beef (cut in matchstick strips to make two cups packed down).

Method: Melt butter in one-quart saucepan over low heat. Stir in flour, salt and mustard. Add milk; cook and stir constantly over moderately low heat until thickened and bubbly. Remove from heat and stir in vinegar and kitchen bouquet. Spread one-half of the cabbage over bottom of baking pan (11¾ by 7½ by 1¾ inches is a good size). Spread corned beef over cabbage, cover with layer of remaining cabbage. Pour sauce over and cover pan with aluminum foil. Bake in moderate (350 degree) oven 40 minutes; bake uncovered 10 minutes longer. Makes six servings.

Old Movies for TV Now Number 1967

HOLLYWOOD, May 19—The flow of old movies to television has reached impressive proportions in recent months. The 458 TV stations now operating have a fresh crop of 1967 features to draw upon. Most of the pictures were made available during the last six months and more will be thrown on the market in the near future. M-G-M is getting close to concluding a deal to put a substantial number of its features into the hopper.

The score stands as follows: RKO, 740 features; Warner Brothers, 850; Columbia 104; J. Arthur Rank (British) 135; Republic 76; Twentieth Century-Fox 52, and David O. Selznick 10.

Paramount has sold more than 1000 short subjects and cartoons, but has not as yet committed any of its features to television. Universal-International also has not made any deals to make its features available to TV.

Michael Todd Picture Deal With Russians

The New York Times News Service.
(Copyright, 1956, by the New York Times Co.)

HOLLYWOOD, May 19.

MICHAEL TODD, film producer and Broadway showman, said he will "confirm" by cable a deal made in Russia recently for the first Soviet-American film co-production venture. Additionally, Todd announced that he will conclude by cablegram arrangements for the presentation in Moscow, starting Nov. 15, of his new production "Around the World in 80 Days," filmed in the large-screen Todd-AO process. He revealed the picture will have matinee showings at a leading Moscow theater on Wednesdays, Saturdays and Sundays.

Although Todd and the Soviets contemplate doing a program of five movies, the producers said that he is signing at present for only one film. The as yet untitled production will be a sort of cultural travelogue, depicting Soviet entertainment arts. Moreover, Todd declared he is "seriously considering" completing an arrangement to take over the distribution in this country of a Russian production in color of "Othello." He said the color composition is the "best" that he has ever seen on the screen.

Todd indicated it will be some time before a definite decision is reached about the proposed co-production deal involving "War and Peace." He reiterated his statement made in Moscow that the agreement would not be completed until there was complete accord on the "artistic conception." He said he could have signed a contract offered by the Russians "a week ago if I were prompted solely by profit motives." He added, "There is no absolutely no political motive in this" (filming "War and Peace"). "They know the book is an indictment of war and there's no way in the world it can come out except as an indictment of war."

M-G-M Seeks Grace Kelly Replacement

HOLLYWOOD, May 19 — M-G-M does not plan to abandon "Designing Woman" if Grace Kelly sticks to her declared intention of giving up her screen career.

Unless the cool princess is back by July the studio intends to get someone else for the feminine lead.

The picture has to roll in July because that is the only time Jimmy Stewart is free.

It is assumed that Grace will be in no mood for returning to work so soon, even if she later decides on doing a few more pictures. So the speculation now is who's going to be the Kelly replacement.

Word from Europe reports that as soon as her serene highness and the prince get settled in the palace at Monaco Ava Gardner has been invited to be their first house guest.

Todon Schedules Eight Pictures

HOLLYWOOD, May 19 — Todon Productions, independent company owned by Tony Owen and his wife, Donna Reed, has scheduled eight pictures for production during the next 12 months. The company has five other films currently in theatrical release. It also has a newly-completed picture "Beyond Mombasa," starring Miss Reed and Cornel Wilde, which Columbia will distribute early next year.

First project on the new program will be "Twist of the Night," an adventure story about deep sea diving for sunken treasure, based on a book published in England and written by Robert McDermott. It will be filmed on the West Coast of Africa in co-operation with Anglo Guild Productions of London.

Others scheduled are "The Man Inside," from a novel by Victor Channing about jewel thieves in Lisbon; "The Last Pursuit," to be made in Bavaria in association with British Lion, Ltd.; "The Eddie Calvert Story," based on the life of the British jazz trumperter; "It's Not Cricket," a comedy starring Lawrence Bollings about a romance between a star athlete and a lady doctor, and "Wherever You Are," a story by Sterling Silliphant to be filmed in Naples and Sorrento.

Owen estimated the program of pictures will cost $9,250,000. He plans to return to England next month to start "Twist of the Night" and to complete negotiations for permanent studio quarters for Todon in London. "Production activity in England and on the continent is growing tremendously," Mr. Owen reported. "With eight films rolling within the year, we need our own studio," he said.

Climate for Illness

By Peter J. Steincrohn, M.D.

WHEN illness strikes, the solution of the problem where to live is not easily made. Besides the economic consideration there is that of what is best for the patient.

Here is a letter received this week from a patient who does not know where to go: "I read your column in the Tampa Times last Saturday and wondered if you could give me some advice. I am now staying in Lakeland. I have what is known as scleroderma. The diagnosis was made about two years ago. My doctor in St. Louis thinks Florida is the place for me. But another doctor in Ohio says that the humidity will make me worse if I stay in Florida.

"I would like to know what you think. I feel much better here than I do at home. My husband has had to go back home to work so I have stayed here. We don't know whether to sell our home and move here or not. I wondered if we should try California, but one doctor said the fog out there would make me feel worse.

"MY DOCTOR here in Florida is very nice. He is frank enough to admit that he doesn't know the answer because he hasn't seen many patients with scleroderma. I am wondering if I ought to try California or Arizona before deciding what to do. I can't stand cold weather and it gets colder in California than it does here in Florida.

"I went to the Mayo Clinic four years ago and they said I couldn't take cold weather; but they wouldn't know where would be the best place for me. They suggested I try out various places and see for myself. I am wondering if I ought to be moving all over the country and tiring myself out. Therefore I would appreciate very much to know what you think. Thanking you so much I remain, Mrs. P. H. H."

ANSWER: There is no specific treatment for scleroderma. It is chronic and soul-trying. Generally we prescribe tonics, vitamins, and a balanced, nutritious diet. Daily massage and heat treatments are welcomed by many patients. In small doses over a long period some doctors have found thyroid extract to be beneficial. Also large doses of vitamin D daily. There have been reports that even testosterone has been tried with occasional success.

As Mrs. P. H. H. has indicated in her letter, such patients feel more comfortable when warm. They cannot stand the cold; or even chilly weather. Patients with this condition must make their own decision regarding the most favorable climate to live in.

I therefore suggest to you, Mrs. P. H. H., that the choice of homesite is entirely yours. No doctor, however willing, can answer that question better than yourself. In fact, I believe you have already answered it. You said that you can't stand cold weather; and that you wonder if you should go weather-shopping all over the country at the risk of tiring yourself out.

MY OPINION is that you now live in a locality where equable year-round weather is unmatched anywhere in this country. You have been relatively comfortable in Florida. Why not untie the rope of indecision which is slowly tying you into knots?

Make your move. Decide that this is it. Having made it, you will find that you have been wise. Nothing is worse than indecision. I have sometimes felt that even the wrong choice is preferable to months and years of "shall I do this?—or shall I do that?"

As for other readers, whatever illness causes your suffering, consider carefully the right move—then make it without any reservations. I have sent some patients to California and others to Arizona—depending on what type of disease they had. Many of my heart patients have moved to Florida and thereby, I am certain, have added years to living. In a number of illnesses, you possibly will remain as comfortable if you stay where you are.

Studio in Disguise

HOLLYWOOD, May 19 (AP) —Motion picture exhibitors from all over the world had a hard time last week finding the Universal-International Studios, at which they were to attend a sales conference and preview of future releases.

Instead of the familiar U.-I. sign outside the studio lot, they found one which read "Manning-National."

Studio officials assured the bewildered exhibitors they were on the right lot. The sign was a dummy for a movie they were shooting about Hollywood.

Clift's Injuries Halt 'Raintree County'

HOLLYWOOD, May 19 — Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer shut down production this week on "Raintree County," pending the recovery of Montgomery Clift from injuries sustained in an automobile accident Saturday night. Clift, who co-stars in the big budget picture with Elizabeth Taylor, is in Cedars of Lebanon hospital here being treated for a broken nose and other injuries.

The studio announced that filming had been "postponed two or three weeks." No immediate information was available as to how much the delay might cost. The picture, which started shooting April 2, was budgeted at $5,000,000 and was said to be the most expensive undertaking by Metro in this country. "Quo Vadis," made by the company in Italy, cost more.

Edward Dmytryk, the director, was scheduled to take the company east next Saturday for two months of location shooting in Kentucky, Tennessee, Louisiana and Mississippi. A caravan of 10 trucks, carting props and other equipment, left the studio last week for Natchez.

Wake Forest College to Move To New Campus 110 Miles Away

Foundation Offer of $500,000 Annually Required Transfer of Entire Institution to Winston-Salem, N. C.

BY BRYAN HAISLIP

WAKE FOREST, N.C., May 19 (AP)—Commencement this spring will be both an ending and a beginning for Wake Forest College.

When seniors receive their diplomas Monday, the Baptist institution will end 122 years on the Magnolia-shaded campus here.

Summer school classes will begin on June 18 in a new $19,000,000 plant 110 miles west in Winston-Salem.

In the 27-day interval, the entire college—leaving only the campus and the buildings—must be packed and transported to its new home. All college furniture and equipment and the household belongings of some 90 faculty members must be moved.

The big operation started rolling May 1. Robert G. Deyton, college vice president and controller estimates about a month will be needed to complete the job.

Ten Years of Planning.

Ten years of planning have gone into Wake Forest's transfer from this rural village of about 3000 to Winston-Salem, an industrial center of some 90,000 population.

The road was prepared by the R. J. Reynolds tobacco fortune. On condition that the college move to Winston-Salem, the Z. Smith Reynolds foundation offered annual income of $350,000 "in perpetuity." (The amount last year was increased to $500,000.) Another Reynolds heir made available 325 acres of the family estate as a stite.

The Baptist state convention, representing the denomination in North Carolina, accepted the offers at a special meeting in the summer of 1946.

After five years of planning and fund-raising, former President Harry S. Truman turned the ceremonial first spade of earth to begin construction on the new campus in 1952.

Transplanting the college from its birthplace pulls at the hearts of many Baptists, including faculty members and townspeople.

Not Dismayed at Task.

Most misgivings now have been buried, and the move is faced in the spirit of "the greatest adventure in Christian higher education in America," the descriptive phrase applied by President Harold W. Tribble.

Deyton, in charge of the actual moving job, is not dismayed at the task of packing and shipping an entire college. Private truckers have been engaged to handle the hauling, he said.

"With a large number of haulers working at it, we should be through" in time for summer school, he explains.

The magnolias which adorn the old campus in large numbers already are represented at the new location. Students took care of that by transplanting a seedling near the chapel which centers the Winston-Salem campus.

Arch to Be Transferred.

Other landmarks also may make the trip. Members of the class of 1909 have announced plans to transfer a granite arch, their gift to the college and a fixture on the old campus.

Intangibles of tradition and associations will be transferred, too, according to college officials.

"Bricks and stones do not make a college," said Prof. Jasper L. Memory Jr., an alumnus and a faculty member for 27 years. "Individuals do that. It is through people that you pass on traditions."

Memory's father attended Wake Forest and his son now is a senior. He points out that practically the entire faculty, including several on the edge of retirement, are following the college.

Even by Memory's standard, the college will leave behind something of its heritage in men long associated with it.

An example is Dr. Hubert Poteat, whose father was Wake Forest president for 22 years. Dr. Poteat is rounding out half a century as one of the college's best known teachers.

"You can't pack tradition in boxes, like books, and ship it 100 miles away," he said. In spite of that, the college administration is making "every human effort" to carry the spirit of Wake Forest into its "great future," he declared.

"I'm just sorry the calendar has caught up with me and I can't go along," he added. Dr. Poteat, 69, was advised by doctors not to make the shift to Winston-Salem because of a heart condition.

Seminary to Move In.

There was no village of Wake Forest before there was the college. What will be left when it is gone?

Part of the answer is Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary, which will take over the campus and buildings. The seminary has been sharing the plant since 1951 and now has an enrollment of 500 students. It is expected to expand rapidly with full use of the property.

Merchants look for a period of economic adjustment to the loss of Wake Forest's approximately 1500 students. Jake Hartsfield, a college graduate and Chamber of Commerce secretary, is leading efforts to attract an industry which might help fill the gap.

"I think the move is a mistake," said Hartsfield, whose family has lived nearby for generations. "But we're not crying about it. I don't think it will hurt the town in the long run," he added.

For the college, a future of wider service is opening, according to President Tribble. He estimates a 25 per cent increase in the faculty will be necessary, along with higher faculty salaries and funds to continue the construction program.

The move is reminiscent of the boost another North Carolina tobacco fortune gave to higher education in the state. The Duke family of Durham provided the funds for the extensive plant which changed Trinity College into Duke Univerity.

Problem for Aramburu.

BUENOS AIRES, May 19 (AP)—Many are wondering if President Pedro Aramburu will attend the meeting of American presidents in Panama next month. If he does, Aramburu, a leader of the revolt against Ex-President Juan D. Peron, will find himself on the same soil where the ousted dictator is in exile. Aramburu has not announced his decision.

DELINQUENCY RISE OF 9 PCT. AMONG JUVENILES IN 1955

WASHINGTON, May 19 (UP)—Dr. Martha M. Eliot, chief of the Children's Bureau, reported today that juvenile delinquency increased 9 per cent last year over 1954.

Nearly half a million children in the 10-to-17 age group were brought into juvenile courts, although some of the offenses were not serious enough to warrant court action.

Dr. Eliot pointed out that during the year the child population in the 10-17 group increased about 3 per cent. She also remarked that the Federal Bureau of Investigation reported an 11.4 per cent increase in police arrests of youngsters under 18 in 1955. The FBI report was based on data from 1162 cities.

Eliot said the Children's Bureau has been receiving an increasing number of requests for help from states and communities which are trying to plan more effectively for delinquents.

"Hopefully, as we move ahead, the joint efforts of local, state and federal groups can pull the delinquency rate down," she said.

Men Study Fashions In Flowers

By ELEANOR B. McCLURE
Post-Dispatch Garden Writer.

Last week I had a most unusual and enjoyable experience. As guest of the Men's Garden Club of America, I attended a number of sessions at their twenty-first annual convention, at Hotel Chase. Hosts for the occasion were the six clubs comprising the Regional Council of Men's Garden Clubs of Greater St. Louis.

It was no surprise to find that these fine gardeners had planned an extremely interesting and informative program, built around the convention theme, "How to Do It Yourself." The theme was echoed many times in the accompanying exhibits, which revealed the last word in garden tools, equipment and other aids, all calculated to make it simpler and easier for the gardener to, shall we say, cultivate his hobby.

Tools ranged all the way from midget electric tillers to a full-sized tractor, along with new electronic devices such as a "moisture comparator" and a "soil probe,"—this last to test moisture conditions in potted plants or in the garden. Besides various types of plant propagators, there was a model greenhouse, fragrant with a collection of scented geraniums.

Flower a Day.

Much interest was shown in the "Flower of the Day" exhibits, an innovation at this convention, I learned. Tuesday was devoted to irises, Wednesday to orchids, and Friday to roses. On Thursday there were literally thousands of peonies from Gilbert Wild, of Sarcoxie, Mo., along with an impressive display of tree peonies from the collection grown by Harold Wolfe, of Belleville. Specimen blooms of named varieties were tagged for easy identification.

The program included lectures on such topics as use of antibiotics on plants and gardening under flourescent lights. Of special interest to many gardeners were the reports of "chief testers" who co-ordinate the plant-testing program of the Men's Garden Clubs.

One of the plant reports, given by Hrano Hampikian, Detroit landscape architect and city planner, was an illustrated lecture on "Shrub Aristocrats," as distinguished from less desirable "scrubs"—old fashioned spirea and barberry.

It pays to select shrubs of true quality, Hampikian said. "Then look to the design and take pains to form congenial groupings of shrubs and trees. Large associations of friendly plants are more attractive.

Sure to Thrive.

"For example, dogwoods like acid soils, and so do azaleas, rhododendrons, leucothoe and mountain laurel. All of these plants grow well together. Design the garden for a proper planting and a proper stage setting."

Although Hampikian conceded that his plant list was a regional one that he had found specially suited to the Detroit area, many of these "aristocrats" can be grown with ease right here in St. Louis. At any rate, the following deciduous plants are almost sure to thrive here:

Fragrant sumac (Rhus aromatica), which has fine foliage and colorful fruits, and grows well clear to the ground; Shining sumac (Rhus copallina), a larger plant with splendid scarlet coloring in the fall; Beautybush (Kolkwitzia amabilis), which has profuse pink blooms in May and fragrant flowers, leaves and stems; Japanese quince (Chaenomeles lagenaris) with its vivid bloom and attractive low growth.

Various types of deciduous euonymus, which have bright berries and fine autumn coloring; the red chokeberry (Aronia arbutifulia) with its heavy crops of shining red berries; various kinds of cotoneaster, all notable for decorative leaves and fruits.

Likes Broad Leaves.

Deutzia lemoinei, which is a good "skirt" shrub to plant in front of tall, leggy shrubs; the little-leaf lilac (Syringa microphylla), with very small leaves and coral pink flower clusters on almost every branch; Spirea wallufi, an improvement over the older Anthony Waterer; many fine viburnums, such as the black haw, the withe-rod viburnum (V. cassinoides); and the Doublefile viburnums (V. tomentosum); the deciduous Flame azaleas; the Star magnolia (M. stellata), which is really a small tree.

Hampikian would also include many broad-leaved evergreens (as well as some that are nearly evergreen). Among the ones that grow well here are firethorn (Pyracantha coccinea, which seems hardier than the erect lalandi); Snow, a white Kurume azalea; and the Oregon grape holly (Mahonia aquifolium).

Somewhat more exacting in their requirements are the drooping leucothoe (L. catesbaei), mountain laurel (Kalmia latifolia) and February Daphne (D. mexereum).

New Vegetables.

A list of promising new vegetables, as recommended by the official testers, was given by Fred F. Rockwell, senior editor of Flower Grower magazine. It is difficult to pry gardeners away from favorite old varieties, he reported, so the acid test was this question, "Will you grow it again?"

A new green bean, Tenderbest, was recommended by many testers, and Burpee's Golden pole bean was another favorite. The best rating for new tomatoes went to Burpee's Big Early. Although many testers didn't vote for the Burpee hybrid canteloupe, Rockwell pronounced it at least the equal of any other he had grown.

This is the new front entrance on Kingshighway of the Jewish Hospital, Kingshighway at Forest Park boulevard, which has just been completed and put into service. The arrangement is part of the hospital's $6,950,000 expansion program and, to the hospital staff, getting the front entrance of the building into service again marks something of a milestone on the job. There are new office suites and other facilities in the area marked by this part of the improvement.

New Northland Bank to Be Opened This Week

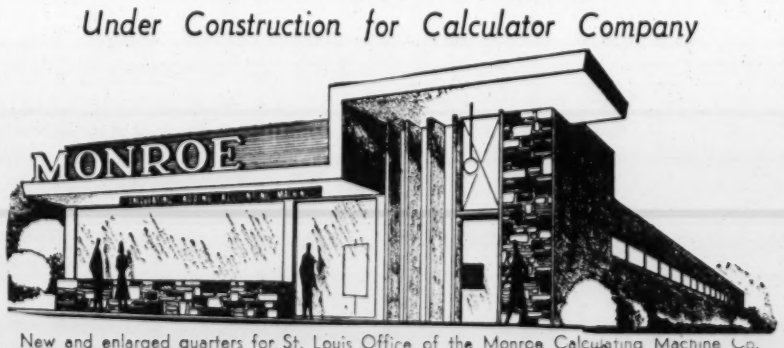

Officers of the new Northland Bank which will open Wednesday in Northland Shopping Center, north St. Louis County, are pictured in the main banking area. Standing at check-writing table is Cashier Walter J. Frintz. Seated in new accounts section are (left) I. C. Smith, president; W. P. Lee, vice president, and Mrs. Charles Joseph, their secretary. The new bank occupies 5000 square feet of space on the upper level of the shopping center, facing Lucas and Hunt road. The air-conditioned banking quarters were designed by Russell, Mullgardt, Schwarz, Van Hoefen. Teller "cages" and fixtures were created by Bloomsdale Bank Building & Equipment Co., Bloomsdale, Mo.

Under Construction for Calculator Company

New and enlarged quarters for St. Louis Office of the Monroe Calculating Machine Co. under construction at 3854 West Washington avenue. The Monroe building, which will be ready for occupancy July 1, will give the St. Louis office 5000 square feet for the sale and service of machines. The building is being erected at a cost of $150,000 on a lot 50 feet by 230 feet. Parking area 80 feet by 50 feet also will be provided. The expanded facilities, said Branch Manager L. G. Bolton, "reflect the growth of both St. Louis and Monroe in this area, and will increase the service and efficiency to our customers."

Nieman Gets Organized At New Site

Although the initial move-in was made shortly before last Christmas, the Nieman Bearings Co. just now feels itself to have things adequately organized in its new home at 2727 Washington avenue to say publicly, "Well, we're here."

The company's new building, with 13,000 square feet of space, is twice the size of what the company had used before at 2837 Locust street. Moreover, the lot and location provide for parking at front and rear of the building.

The new facilities will replace the utility company's present East St. Louis office building at 7 Collinsville avenue and the Winstanley garage at 558 North Twentieth street, which are being sold to the City of East St. Louis. Remodeled Tower Grove Bank Plans Ceremonial 'Opening'

Although it hasn't been closed while reconstruction was going on, the newly remodeled Tower Grove Bank and Trust Co., will be "formally reopened" next Wednesday and Thursday marking completion of the $900,000 project. Bank Building and Equipment Corporation did the job.

Northland Bank Set To Open

A new Northland Bank will open in Northland Shopping Center, West Florissant avenue and Lucas and Hunt road, next Wednesday. The bank occupies 5000 square feet of space on the upper level of the shopping center, facing Lucas and Hunt.

The bank is contemporary in design and has a complete glass front. The night depository is set in a column of field stone which contrasts with the dark red brick of the shopping center buildings. The architectural firm of Russell, Millgardt, Schwarz, Van Hoefen designed the bank quarters, which are fully air-conditioned.

The bank interior is decorated in soft shades of green with walnut trim. The eight teller "cages" are functionally designed and are equipped with electronic change-makers and mechanized equipment for recording both savings and checking account transactions. The bank fixtures were designed and manufactured by the Bloomsdale Bank Building and Equipment Co., Bloomsdale, Mo.

The new accounts and loan departments are located in a large open area at the north side of the lobby. Behind the teller positions are a conference room and the bookkeeping department.

"We are a shopping center bank and have designed our quarters to serve the needs of the people who live, work, and shop in the Northland Shopping Center area," I. C. Smith, bank president, said. "Suburban living and shopping are friendly and informal . . . we think people will find our bank that way, too."

The bank will be open Monday and Friday evenings, Smith said, and until 4:30 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. "Our hours are designed to make it convenient for people to do their banking while they are shopping or on their way home from work," he said.

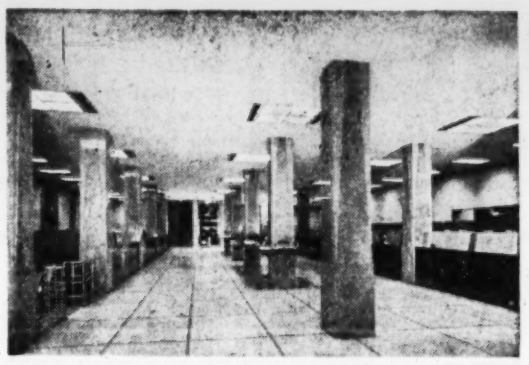

In addition to Smith, bank officers are W. P. Lee, vice-president, and Walter J. Frintz, cashier. All are veteran St. Louis bankers.

Directors of the new bank are James H. Meredith, partner in the law firm of Stolar, Kuhlmann & Meredith; John A. Nooney, vice-president of G. J. Nooney & Co., and of Northland Shopping Center, Inc.; John Nordman, president of John Nordman Co.; R. E. Petering, vice-president and treasurere of Emerson Electric Company, and President Smith.

The bank will open with capital, surplus and undivided profits of $500,000.

It has just been completed by Murch-Jarvis Construction Co. Crestwood Electronics (television, radio, etc.) is owned and operated by Jack Adams, former electronics officer in the U.S. Navy.

The subdivision is a development of Wendell F. Shasserre, builder, with Pueser Realty Company, selling agent.

Sewers, Disposal Plants Keyed to Metropolitan's Plan, Mark Subdivisions

By VIRGIL G. BAKER
Post-Dispatch Real Estate Editor.

Major factors basic to community health and the maintenance of quality in real property . . . full sewer installations and sewage disposal provisions . . . are coming increasingly to be incorporated in subdivision development in St. Louis county.

With formal openings upcoming, two new subdivisions in widely different price classifications and in widely separate areas, geographically, are cases in point. They are two Goldberg & Co.'s Ladue Estates, 84 acres on the south side of Ladue road, at Moseley road, admittedly a luxury-styled development, and Hardesty-Johnson's Lynn Haven, a huge (123 acres) development on Highway 140 north of Highway 66 by-pass in Hazelwood, which has been designed to be sound housing, but admittedly not in the luxury price class.

Nevertheless, the significant thing about these subdivisions is that both have full, engineered sanitary sewer systems, with disposal units, designed, engineered and intalled in collaboration with officials of the new Metropolitan Sewer District with a view to simple and inexpensive tie-in with the metropolitan trunk and outfall sewers when they come into being. Connections will be made, from such systems, either to pour the effluence of the various area plants into the metropolitan lines or to bypass such installations and connect directly, as engineering dictates.

Both Ladue Estates and Lynn Haven also have separate storm water drainage lines.

Installation of such sewer systems costs considerable money, the figure of $40,000 being quite often heard with reference to diposal units alone (not counting sewer lines); a figure which would vary considerably with the size, of course, and area to be handled.

In the case of Ladue Estates, Goldberg has done his own financing on the system and plant there, but at Lynn Haven, the developers there have tied their lines into a half-mile long trunk (with plant at Cold Water Creek), which has been undertaken by a separate corporation to drain an area of 1260 acres in which other builders also are acquiring land and undoubtedly will also subdivide. Lynn Haven is first of probably several developments that will make use of that plant. The Elm Grove school, at the entrance to Lynn Haven, which had had trouble with a septic tank system, already has tied in.

Streets Cost, Too.

Where sewer systems aren't yet feasible or can't be logically financed at this time in county subdivision developments, the use of soil porosity tests to reg-

Bank Job On Grand Finished

Conversion of a traditional, classic-style bank building to larger, modern quarters for Tower Grove Bank and Trust Company, Grand boulevard at Hartford street, was completed last week by Bank Building and Equipment Corporation of America. Cost of the extensive renovation and expansion was approximately $900,000.

With about 27,000 square feet of floor space on two floors, the redesigned structure provides 65 per cent more public and work space. Automobile banking facilities have been integrated with increased parking area at the east end of the building.

The contemporary design of the bank's exterior blends black granite, plate glass, Roman brick, aluminum, and Pennsylvania green and Colorado red sandstone in random ashlar pattern. Windows are aluminum awning-type.

New Lobby Developed.

The first-floor lobby has a terrazzo floor, cocoa brown plaster walls, marble columns and check desks of walnut and glass. Tellers' counters are black and gold-veined marble. The ceiling has been lowered, accustical tiled and engineered to include recessed fluorescent lighting fixtures.

The new accounts, safe deposit and executive officers' areas are carpeted.

Carpeting, aluminum railing and walnut paneling and fixtures have been employed throughout the trust, real estate and personal loan departments on the second floor. Also upstairs are a directors' room, library, conference areas, lounges, bookkeeping office and an employes' recreation deck. Two hydraulic elevators provide access.

The entire building is air-conditioned.

Drive-up Windows.

Two drive-up windows, with bullet-proof glass and two-way communication systems, are situated off Hartford street. An adjoining "island" vestibule, outside the bank proper, houses two walk-up tellers for pedestrians.

The bank will conduct "open house" next Wednesday and Thursday to mark the completion of its physical transformation. During 35 years in its present site, it had previously remodeled twice on a smaller scale. Tower Grove Bank, founded in 1911, was originally situated at Grand boulevard and Juniata street. Its resources now total more than $82,000,000, making it one of the five largest banks in St. Louis.

Arthur L. Locatell is president of the bank. Vice presidents are Robert D. Kerr, Arthur H. Gidionsen, Elmer von Doersten, William A. Gauvin, Bernard W. Schrand, Waldo L. Daesch and Edwin R. Schertzer. Directors, in addition to Locatell and Gidionsen, are F. E. Briner, William, William H. Frank, W. F. Heinecke, Richard C. Muckerman, Robert Mueller, M.D.; Robert C. Newman, Ernest H. Schultz Jr., Carl G. Stifel, Norman J. Stupp, Edward C. Wagner and John M. Wolff Jr.

Parking Property Planning Subject For Discussions

Multi-level parking garages are now a permanent part of the downtown scene in many American cities and their design and construction will receive serious discussion at the fifth annual convention of the National Parking Association being held here tomorrow through Wednesday. Good contemporary design with new postwar building methods have created many garages that are both architecturally attractive and functionally practical.

More than 500 parking men and guests from 36 states and several foreign countries will be on hand at the convention to hear how progressive American cities have increased downtown parking spaces by updating archaic building codes that prohibit the construction of streamlined structural steel and concrete garages.

ulate the construction and efficiency of septic tank installations have been instituted. Where, a few years ago the county called arbitrarily for tanks of certain size and 200 lineal feet of leaching field (or equivalent) the installations now are varied, depending on what soil tests show about the ability of an area to provide evaporative fields for the effluence of tanks.

Another factor in subdivision development that costs subdividers and builders money is the construction of streets. Many of them are using concrete these days, installing saucer-lip curbing, and an increasing number of them have gone back to the installation of public sidewalks as a means of creating safe places for children with wheel toys . . . out of traffic lanes.

Whereas, in former years (and as is done in some other places now), the surfacing of streets was a matter within the province of corporate governments with costs assessed on a front-foot basis against property owners over a period of years (as a special assessment part of the tax bill), the subdividers here must foot the bills and put the streets in as a part of the subdivision development.

Installation of sewers and paving of streets by the subdivider and builder as part of the initial capital investment by the home buyer, which makes these improvements part of the home buyer's original investment rather than a separate cost item added to the tax bill, are factors which make a difference in the price of homes in this area and the price asked for houses in other places where streets and sewers are made special assessment tax items.

The first street in Ladue Estates, where there will be two others later, was poured a little over a week ago and has cured to the extent that it is possible for visitors to go into the subdivision today. Houses will be of contemporary design with two, three or four-bedroom floor plans.

Development of Lynn Haven will include construction of approximately 500 houses and a 20-acre shopping center. The basic house plan is for three-bedroom design, full basement and attached garage and exterior construction of brick and frame. Sliding mahogany passage and closet doors will give maximum wall space for placement of furniture. Full air-conditioning and a built-in electric kitchen center will be optional.

There will be three miles of 32-foot-wide main and cross streets in Lynn Haven, which will be opened Sunday, May 27. Display houses will be furnished by the Marx Bros. Home Furnishers, Inc., Jack Davidson Furniture Co., Inc., and Loew's Furniture Co.

The firm of Hardesty-Johnson has built 366 houses in seven subdivisions and custom construction since 1950.

Mari-Kay Court, a subdivision at Eulalie and Rosalie, three blocks east of the Brentwood City Hall, has just been opened by Fred L. Sherrell, builder. Features of the three-bedroom, brich ranch-style homes include full basement and gas heat.

Other developments of Sherrell include Sherrell Park, Summit Park, Glenridge Park, and Glendale and Shady Hill Acres. The Reliance Real Estate Co. is agent for the Mari-Kay development.

Twenty houses of a planned 200 have been started and two display homes completed in Hazel Woods, a 50-acre subdivision of Roger Michelson and William L. Raney of R. and R. Developers, Inc., in the City of Hazelwood. Entry to Hazel Woods is off Lindbergh to Highway 140 and then north to the development. The three-bedroom ranch-style houses are air-conditioned and have gas heat, full basements, "family rooms" and carports.

The subdivision will have four concrete streets and separate sanitary and storm sewers with a main trunk to Coldwater creek.

A display house in Briarwood No. 6 has been completed and will be opened today, according to Robert L. Gast, builder, who has taken over operation of the Gast Building and Realty Co. and will continue development of the Briarwood subdivision, located south of the new Horton Watkins High School and west of Watson road.

Homes are under construction in Briarwood No. 6 and a tract has been purchased for development of Briarwood No. 7 in the fall. The display house, opened today, is approximately a quarter of a mile west and north of the entrance on Springwood drive. James P. Wilson is sales agent.

Advanced land planning methods are important factors in the Fernbrook subdivision being developed by the J. Ben Miller Realty Co. Winding streets are of concrete with curbs and gutters designed to cut down traffic hazards for children. Sanitary and storm sewers, as well as city utilities, are available in the development.

A new high school, scheduled for occupancy next year, is three blocks from the subdivision and a proposed 25-store shopping center is within walking distance.

One of the Custom National Homes' models will be open today for the first time in this area, according to Miller. The display is on Mullanphy road and Tyson drive. The house features three bedrooms, alcove-type bath with vanity lavatory and an extra half-bath, large living room and a full basement. A four-bedroom National Homes' model also will be displayed. Both houses are furnished and decorated.

Fernbrook is two and one-half miles northeast of the Ford-Mercury plant, east on Route 140 and left at Patterson road to Mullanphy road.

This property at 4503-11 Arco drive, an eight-family apartment, has been sold by the Lillian Vanderloecht Estate through the John W. Burian Realty Co. to interests taking title in the name of Eleanor Griev, represented by Gitt & Sons Real Estate Co. Also included in property transferred from the estate to the Griev interests were two four-family flats at 4501-03 Wichita, 4540 Chouteau and two one-story store buildings at 4252-54 Manchester. Consideration wasn't reported.

Cotton Belt Office Lease Is Renewed

The St. Louis Southwestern Railway (Cotton Belt) has signed a five-year renewal of its lease on space occupied by its general offices in the Cotton Belt Building, Charles H. Christel, president of Rodemyer-Christel & Co., building manager, reports.

The building has been called the Cotton Belt Building since 1930, when the railroad first became a tenant, and the name will remain unchanged under the new lease.

Approximately 75 executives and employes of the railroad occupy the company's general offices. These include the president, the vice president, the purchasing agent and staff, the general counsel and staff, general traffic manager and approximately 35 of the road's other top traffic personnel, plus clerical and secretarial employes.

The new lease covers approximately 14,000 square feet of air-conditioned space, of which part is subleased for use as traffic offices to the Southern Pacific Co.

The Southern Pacific owns approximately 89 per cent of the Cotton Belt's stock and, according to Cotton Belt officials, there is a close working relationship between the two roads, principally in the handling of transcontinental traffic.

Commenting on the lease renewal, the railroad officials said they considered the location of the Cotton Belt Building in downtown St. Louis "ideal for our headquarters operation."

"It is decidedly advantageous for us to have our executive offices in the downtown area," they said, "because of our close relations with shippers and other railroads and because of our need to be close to Union Station and the Southwestern Freight Bureau.

"In addition to being close to the people we do business with, the building is close to parking facilities on the riverfront and our offices are roomy and comfortable."

In addition to approximately 75 employes in the Cotton Belt Building, the railroad has 500 employes at the St. Louis freight station and 300 at the freight station and yards in East St. Louis.

The building, formerly owned by the Cotton Belt Building Co., which has no connection with the railroad, was sold recently to Marvin S. Winter and Laco Associates of New York City.

signed the building and the William H. & Nelson Cunliff Co. built it. Carl H. Nieman, who's president of Nieman Bearings, and his wife, Velma A. Neiman, who's executive vice-president in charge of operations of the firm, own the property.

One reason why it took nearly six months to get everything ship-shape is that the firm maintains a perpetual inventory of more than 34,000 items, some 25,000 of which are bearings of varied types at range from things one can't hardly see without a magnifying glass up to items that weigh as much as two tons and run several feet in diameter.

Nieman is a pioneer bearing specialist, is oldest and claims to be the largest such institution in this area. The firm was started as a man and wife business, now employs an average of 40 here and in East St. Louis.

The store was started at the Locust address, expanded there from one into four more adjoining store units before it was found necessary to build. The new location was chosen as a "fringe" position on the downtown area, to handle trade from downtown and outlying areas.

"We didn't go any farther out because we think downtown is vital and will continue to be so," said representatives of the firm.

The new property has a 70-foot long parts counter, adjoining telephone order desks, teletype installation for check on stock or availability. There is a recreation room for employes which may also be used in training class program and training in customer maintenance programs. Ken Engel is sales manager, also heads up the educational procedures.

Eliminates Bother.

A socket type circuit breaker introduced only three years ago, screws into any standard fuseholder and eliminates the bother of continually having to change fuses. Merely pushing the button restores service when the breaker is tripped.

Designs Time Chart.

A time performance chart which takes guesswork out of lawn mowing has been developed by lawn expert Allen W. Greene of the Moto-Mower Co. of Richmond, Ind.

Outlook Not Hopeful for More Homes

By HUGH L. MORRIS

WASHINGTON, D.C. (INS)—Concern over the shortage of mortgage money to finance future home construction has greatly offset the news of a seasonal upswing in housing starts during April.

The consensus among industry and government economists is that the volume of new homes built in 1956 will fall considerably below the number last year unless there is a breakthrough to new money.

President Joseph B. Haverstick of the National Association of Home Builders told Congress that right now the housing outlook for the remainder of the year "is not hopeful."

He warned that increasingly selective loan placements, as the money supply tightens, will mean a sacrifice of low cost "mass" housing to more expensive "class" homes.

Would Open Way.

The N.A.H.B. and the National Association of Real Estate Boards urged immediate government action to improve the situation.

The House Banking and Currency Committee before which they testified already has proposed two remedies: liberalized operations by the Federal National Mortgage Association and limited use of National Service Life Insurance fund reserves.

New money in the market would open the way for a late summer surge—similar to 1954—which top government housing officials expect to boost starts to last year's 1,300,000 level.

However, a government economist looked at the April figures and said: "Somebody is going to have to start building like mad if the more optimistic estimates are to be met. These are the 'money months' and it will be an uphill struggle once they pass."

Rush in April.

Generally, the experts now anticipate a total somewhere between April's annual rate of 1,100,000 to a top of 1,200,000.

Applications filed last month for VA guaranties and FHA insurance moved sideways—FHA was 10 per cent below March and VA was up about 15 per cent. A builders' rush to beat the end of G.I. home loan benefits apparently helped to boost the VA total.

While housing starts moved upward in April for the first time this year, bids in the seccan get better terms elsewhere ondary market for FHA-insured home mortgages weakened after steady advances for three months. It indicated lenders for their money.

The declines were most pronounced in some areas where starts barely held their own or dropped slightly.

FHA said: "Some opinions from the regions where mortgage prices weakened indicated a dampening effect on builders' plans for constructing single-family homes."

Transform Basement.

A basement may be transformed into a water-proof playroom with a scrub brush and masonry paint, which comes in a variety of colors.

TUB FOR DOG

Mom won't appreciate having the bathroom covered with wet dog hairs and soaked with dirty, soapy water when Rover gets bathed. To prevent a mess in the bathroom and a hair-clogged bathtub drain, shampoo the pooch in a large galvanized steel laundry tub in the basement, garage or backyard.

SLEEP IMPORTANT

During the construction of Hoover Dam at Boulder City, Nev., field studies showed the importance of getting enough sleep in hot weather.

During the first summer of construction, 15 deaths and an unrecorded number of collapses were attributed to the heat. Then workers' dormitories were air conditioned, insuring a good sleeping "climate," and the result was no deaths and only five cases of heat cramps during the second summer.

Easy to Clean and Keep Clean

Today's modern kitchens are easy to clean and to keep clean. This one is finished in soilproof panels of baked enamel finish that resist moisture, grease and stains, and the cabinets are steel. The floor is topped with confetti patterned material. Kitchens may be made up today in many color schemes and varied combinations of materials and equipment designed for placement in small, medium or large areas.

League District Meeting Called; Saving, Loans Up

The Missouri Saving and Loan League will have a district meeting at the Statler Hotel Wednesday, starting with a luncheon at 12:15 p.m., T. Victor Jeffries of Lebanon, executive manager of the league, reports.

Guests will be Boyd Ewing of Nevada, lawyer for Farm & Home Savings & Loan Association; Robert H. Bush, Walter H. Lohman and Gene Mueller of the Des Moines Federal Home Loan Bank, and Morris Gordon of Jefferson City, state supervisor of Savings and Loan.

Earl Edwards of Macon, president of the league, will preside. Items of savings and loan management are on the agenda for discussion. Edwards will inform the group that the business in Missouri is now over $900,000,000 and that there was an increase in 1955 of 21.2 per cent in total assets; that there are now 122,000 loans, an increase of 22 per cent over a year ago, and with savings continuing to grow, it is the forecast that business will make 45 per cent of the home loans made in Missouri in 1956.

Difference in FHA and VA Costs Shown

By ROBERT F. MORRISON

WASHINGTON, D.C. (UP)—Studies by the Veterans Administration and the Federal Housing Administration give a good idea of what a large portion of the home-buying public is like.

Purchasers of new homes using VA-backed mortgages last year averaged about 32 years of age. The average FHA-insured mortgage home buyer was about three years older.

The difference was due chiefly to the lower down payments required by VA which permits younger ex-G.I.'s to buy homes without prolonged saving.

The average price for new homes purchased under the VA's program was $11,800 compared with FHA's $12,110.

Down payments are harder to compare because, before last summer, VA guaranteed mortgages without down payments. However down payments for those who made them averaged slightly more than $1400. For FHA-insured mortgages down payment averaged around $1815. Neither figure includes settlement or closing costs.

The veterans' average monthly bill to run his house, including payments on interest and principal, taxes, utilities and a portion set aside for maintenance, totaled $96.75. For an FHA mortgage this was about $98.

The difference is mainly the longer average period over which VA loans are repaid and the one-half of one per cent additional mortgage insurance premium FHA home buyers must pay.

Incomes of G.I. buyers, before taxes, averaged $500.80 a month. For FHA home buyers the after-tax monthly income figure was about $458.

Monthly Cost Up.

The monthly cost of running the house has been increasing steadily in the postwar years. From 1954 to 1955 average FHA payments went up about $6. For FHA home buyers this year-to-year increase was about $5.

A further increase is expected this year as the price of homes goes up, reflecting higher labor, material and land costs.

The fact that more wives work today than ever before complicates the picture. If a working wife is beyond the child-bearing age or able to continue working indefinitely, her husband can expect approval of a bigger mortgage. However if a wife is working only temporarily, lenders tend to discount her addition to the family pocketbook.

Kitchen Condition Benefits Family

An air conditioner in the kitchen benefits every member of the family. Such window units will cool, heat, clean and dehumidify the air and also eliminate cooking odors. An electronic filter traps dust and other air-borne substances as small as 1/25,000th of an inch. Handsome, compact and whisper-quiet, the new window unit with heating element is a year-around joy to housewives. A built-in thermostat automatically maintains selected temperature and humidity conditions. Placement of unit does not obstruct the view.

Ben Lindenbusch, owner of Ben Lindenbusch Studebaker, 3300 South Kingshighway, has been re-elected by the dealers of the Studebaker St. Louis zone to represent them on the National Dealers' Council, which meets at the South Bend Studebaker plant. This is the second year Lindenbusch has been chosen to act for the St. Louis group.

ity when it comes to vegetable gardening, for he and his wife (who writes under the name of Esther Grayson) have a king-sized food garden at Gray Rock, their West Nyack, N.Y. home. They even have grown such unusual plants as upland cress and whitloof chickory. Mrs. Rockwell also takes a keen interest in her herb garden.

"The area devoted to vegetables is decreasing," Rockwell admits. "New flowers sent in for trial are taking up more and more space that formerly went to vegetables."

At West Nyack the Rockwells have more than an acre devoted to flowers. Although they grow the widest possible variety of annuals and perennials, their special favorites are bulbs and roses.

Soon the Rockwells are to move to a 40-acre estate, May Flower Point, near Orleans on Cape Cod. Only a small part of this acreage will be turned into gardens, of course, but they plan to continue testing new plants and new procedures.

Rockwell, who has a lifelong interest in plants, says he is one of the few garden editors who was a gardener before he became an editor.

America's Greatest Lawn Discovery

FIRST MERION BLUE, THEN MEYER ZOYSIA
NOW EMERALD ZOYSIA
World's Most Beautiful Grass!

Available Today for St. Louis Homeowners After Development by the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture

AS WEED-FREE, AS TOUGH AS MEYER ZOYSIA BUT FAR MORE BEAUTIFUL

Here's the Fabulous Story of This New King of Lawn Grasses

by George H. Brown

I have just seen the most unbelievably beautiful lawn grass ever developed. Until you, too, have seen the new Emerald Zoysia you can have no idea how magnificent a lawn can be. It's color is the richest Emerald Green nature has ever produced. And it grows so dense, is so smooth that it looks like a faultless green carpet that has been unrolled across the yard. Beside Emerald Zoysia every other lawn grass I have ever seen looks coarse and patchy. Developed by years and years of patient, tireless research by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, Emerald Zoysia is now judged by many experts to be the most perfect lawn grass of our time. Like its close relative, Meyer Zoysia, Emerald chokes out crab grass and other weeds, stays green through the hottest summers. Like Meyer it requires less water, less mowing. Like Meyer it isn't bothered by fungus or insects. Like Meyer it can stand almost any amount of traffic or children's play without a sign of wear. BUT UNLIKE MEYER AND EVERY OTHER LAWN GRASS IN THE WORLD, EMERALD has a COLOR THAT IS THE RICHEST ROYAL SHADE OF EMERALD, A COLOR THAT MATCHES IN BEAUTY THE PRECIOUS STONE FOR WHICH IT IS NAMED.

SO DENSE, SO SMOOTH YOU CAN'T SEE THE BLADES

When you look at a lawn of Kentucky Blue Grass or Meyer Zoysia, even if it is well-cared for, you see thousands of tiny blades that make up the lawn. When I looked at one of the first Emerald Zoysia Lawns I had to blink my eyes. Instead of individual blades I saw a broad Emerald velvet carpet. I couldn't see individual blades any more than I could see the threads in a velvet cape. And nowhere was there a single weed. NOT ONE! For Emerald Zoysia forms such a thick, impenetrable turf that weeds can be FORGOTTEN.

SCIENCE IS NEVER SATISFIED

Ten years ago when black and white television sets came on the market we all hailed them as the wonder of the age. Nothing could be more amazing. Yet today scientists have developed color T-V that is far more exciting, far more beautiful. This is the Zoysia story too. When U. S. Dept. of Agriculture scientists released Meyer Zoysia, magazines and garden editors acclaimed it as the wonder grass we'd all been waiting for. Little did they know that the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture was hard at work developing an even more marvelous variety of Zoysia to make your lawn more beautiful than you ever dreamed it could be. A grass that grows even more densely, that stays green longer in the fall, a grass that will beautify your home and property to give it an elegance and distinction unmatched by any other property around you. This grass is EMERALD ZOYSIA, the aristocrat of lawn grasses.

HERE'S HOW YOU PLANT EMERALD ZOYSIA

Emerald Zoysia cannot be planted with seeds. You plant the actual grass. We send you freshly cut planting material which separates into individual plants. The picture shows you how you plant the sprigs of grass (a sprig consists of blade, root and node of growing point) in rows after you dig a shallow trench. You need no special tools at all. And sprigs grow and spread faster, go further than any other planting method used. Sprig planting cuts your cost way, way down. Thanks to this "Grower's method" of planting you can have an Emerald Zoysia lawn this year for no more than you would pay for Meyer.

AS SMOOTH AS VELVET, AS GREEN AS EMERALD

Put your house in the above picture and imagine how you will feel when every foot of your yard is covered with a dense, smooth emerald green turf. And then remember that your lawn will stay this beautiful without constant attention, or constant expense. Emerald Zoysia is the lifetime grass. Never needs to be reseeded. Once it is established it is as permanent as your home. Whether you are putting in a new lawn or patching an old one, order Emerald Zoysia now. Once you have seen an Emerald Zoysia lawn you will never be satisfied until you have one. Quantities of Emerald Zoysia are extremely limited, so we advise ordering at once. NOW IS THE RIGHT TIME TO PLANT.

100% GUARANTEE

We guarantee prompt delivery of top-quality, freshly-cut Emerald Zoysia Planting Material. Your Order processed immediately! We guarantee that it will reach you in perfect condition and we guarantee it will grow in your yard this season or it will be replaced absolutely free. All we ask is that you follow our clear instructions for Complete Success.

RUSH COUPON TODAY— YOUR ORDER WILL BE SHIPPED AT ONCE

We pay full postage on all prepaid orders. C.O.D.'s are welcome with a 25c advance deposit. Complete Planting and Growing Guide included.

Easy "Do-It-Yourself" Method Makes Emerald Zoysia America's Most Economical Lawn Grass

If you don't plant your entire lawn with Emerald Zoysia now you can still have a complete Emerald Zoysia lawn. As soon as the section you plant is well established just take your own sprigs out of it and plant the rest of your yard. Every sprig you plant this year produces hundreds more by next year.

Florissant Parish Development to Get Under Way

Architectural sketch of proposed new buildings for new St. Dismas parish, on which construction is expected to be started late in July or early August, on a five-acre tract that lies along the south side of Parker road, just east of Florissant. Entry to on-site parking ground will be from Paddock Hills Drive, with exit onto Parker road. Development will include 16-classroom grade school, cafeteria and kitchen, small auditorium, convent, rectory and church. Half of school will be initial project and auditorium to serve as church temporarily until remainder of construction can be completed.

Answers To Some Quizzes

Since leaders in the industry are predicting that at least 1,550,000 room air conditioners will be sold in 1956, it's a good bet that during the next few months at least 1,550,000 questions will be asked about installing these units.

Here is a preview of a few of the questions most likely to concern consumers.

1. Q. Must a room air conditioner be installed at the bottom of a window?

A. No, it can be installed in a wall, or in the top of a window, or in a storage space or bookshelves backed by an outside wall. The two essentials are having the unit in an outside wall, and in a spot that will make possible a good flow of air through the room to be conditioned.

2. Q. How can the size of a room air conditioner be determined?

A. This should be done by the air conditioner dealer, based on these factors: size of room to be conditioned, its location in the building, sun exposure on outside walls, insulation and use or occupancy.

3. Q. What is the best height from the floor for installing the air conditioner?

A. The window opening will generally determine this, so it is not a matter of choice. In the case of special installations in a wall opening, the unit may be located either below or above the normal window sill level, depending on the decor of the room or other factors important to the homeowner. However, installations more than six feet above the floor are to be avoided for two reasons: The controls will be inconvenient to reach, and some of the cooling capacity will be lost in cooling the air close to the ceiling.

4. Q. Can the drip of water from my air conditioner down to my neighbor's apartment be avoided?

A. There is a possibility of attaching a special water drain hose. However, most room air conditioners as built today dispose of the moisture it collects by spraying it into the atmosphere.

5. Q. Does a two-story house present any particular problems to a home owner who is using a single air conditioner to cool one upstairs bedroom?

A. No, except that these factors should be considered: There is potentially an additional load on the unit from the sun beating down onto a flat roof or on an unventilated attic space above the room being cooled.

6. Q. What is a good general practice to follow in opening or closing windows throughout the house when a single room air conditioner is used?

A. For maximum cooling effect, the windows in the room or rooms being cooled should be kept closed. In other rooms, not connected to the cooled room by open doors or archways, it makes no difference whether windows are open or closed. The same principle should be followed when there are units in more than one room.

SCRUB WALLS FIRST

Basement walls should be thoroughly scrubbed, permitted to dry and then dampened before applying masonry paint, says H. W. Cairns, president of Rox Products Co.

USE DOUBLE GLASS

Double-pane insulating windows are important to summer air conditioning just as they are to winter heating, latest studies of temperature control problems reveal.

Builders are finding the double-pane glass, which reduces heat loss in winter months, plays the opposite role in summer by cutting heat intake. This, in turn, lightens the air-conditioning load and often enables smaller, less expensive equipment to handle the cooling job.

ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH PICTURES

Three crewmen gaze wistfully toward shore from the sidewheeler Mississippi. Captain Roy, nautically attired, leans out of the pilot house. First Mate Jack stands at railing nearby and Jimmy, a stevedore, sits on housing of the paddlewheel. Visible over Jack's shoulder is the whistle sounded occasionally during the show to clear other craft from the nonexistent river.

LIFE ON THE MISSISSIPPI

St. Louis Zoo's Chimps Are Entertaining Their Audience From Aboard a Showboat in Forest Park

By CHARLES MENEES of the PICTURES Staff

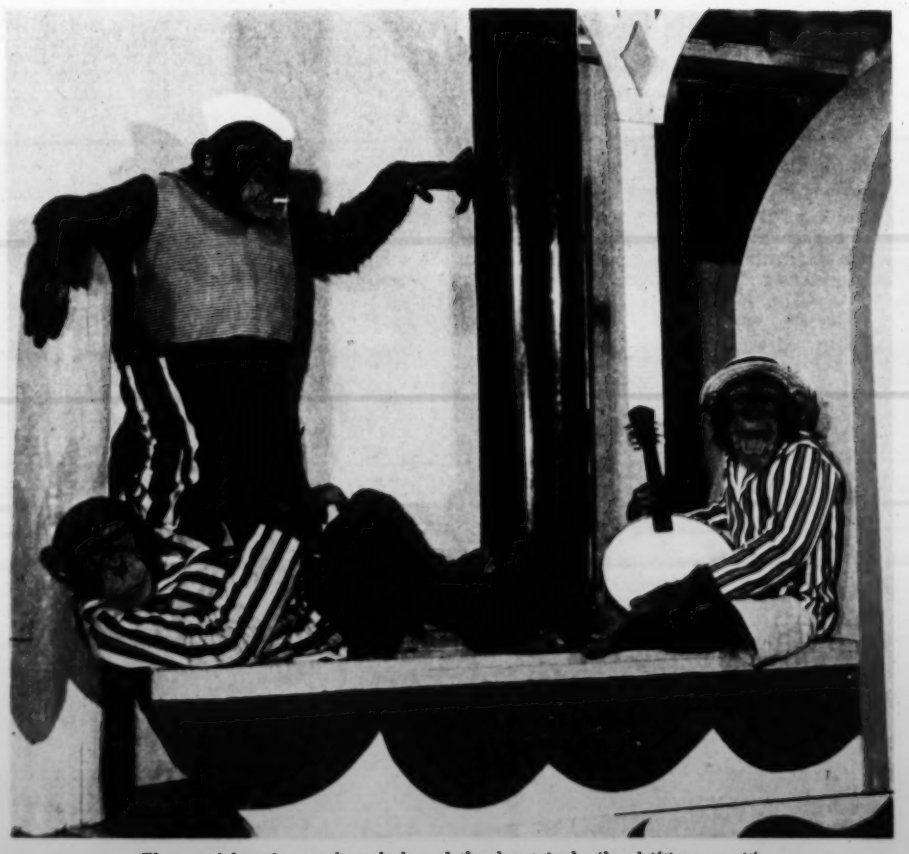

CHIMPANZEES, BY NATURE, aren't fond of being around the water. There must be, therefore, a waterproof reason why a dozen chimps of the St. Louis Zoo have taken to a boat for the summer. And there is. This boat isn't the floating kind, but rather is moored by nails to the stage of the zoo's chimp show arena in Forest Park. The nearest water is in the moat purposely located in front of the stage to discourage the chimps from leaping into the audience.

Because St. Louis is rich in Mississippi River tradition and since these chimps are actors, it logically follows that their boat should be a showboat. In the double role of crew and cast, the chimps do the piloting, pull the rope that sounds the whistle, loll on deck, ride a motorscooter and bicycles, jump on "water skis" equipped with skate wheels, pantomime a song, go through the motions of playing music from a bandstand. There's even a banjo player aboard.

This season, for the first time, curtains are opened and closed at intervals during the show. These and the showboat set were designed by Fred Conway, noted American muralist and instructor of advanced painting at Washington University. Chimpanzee Showboat, as the act is called, lasts about 35 minutes, is given at 12 noon and 3:30 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday, and at noon, 2 and 4 o'clock on Sunday. Monday is a holiday—shore leave—for showboat crew and cast.

Pyramid ride on a real motorscooter on the showboat's levee. Roy grips the handlebars. Jimmy is on his back and Jack perches on frame at rear from which he later does a handstand. Roy, at 10, is the senior member of the cast. He is also the heaviest, weighing 115 pounds. Jack is 7 years old, Jimmy is 4.

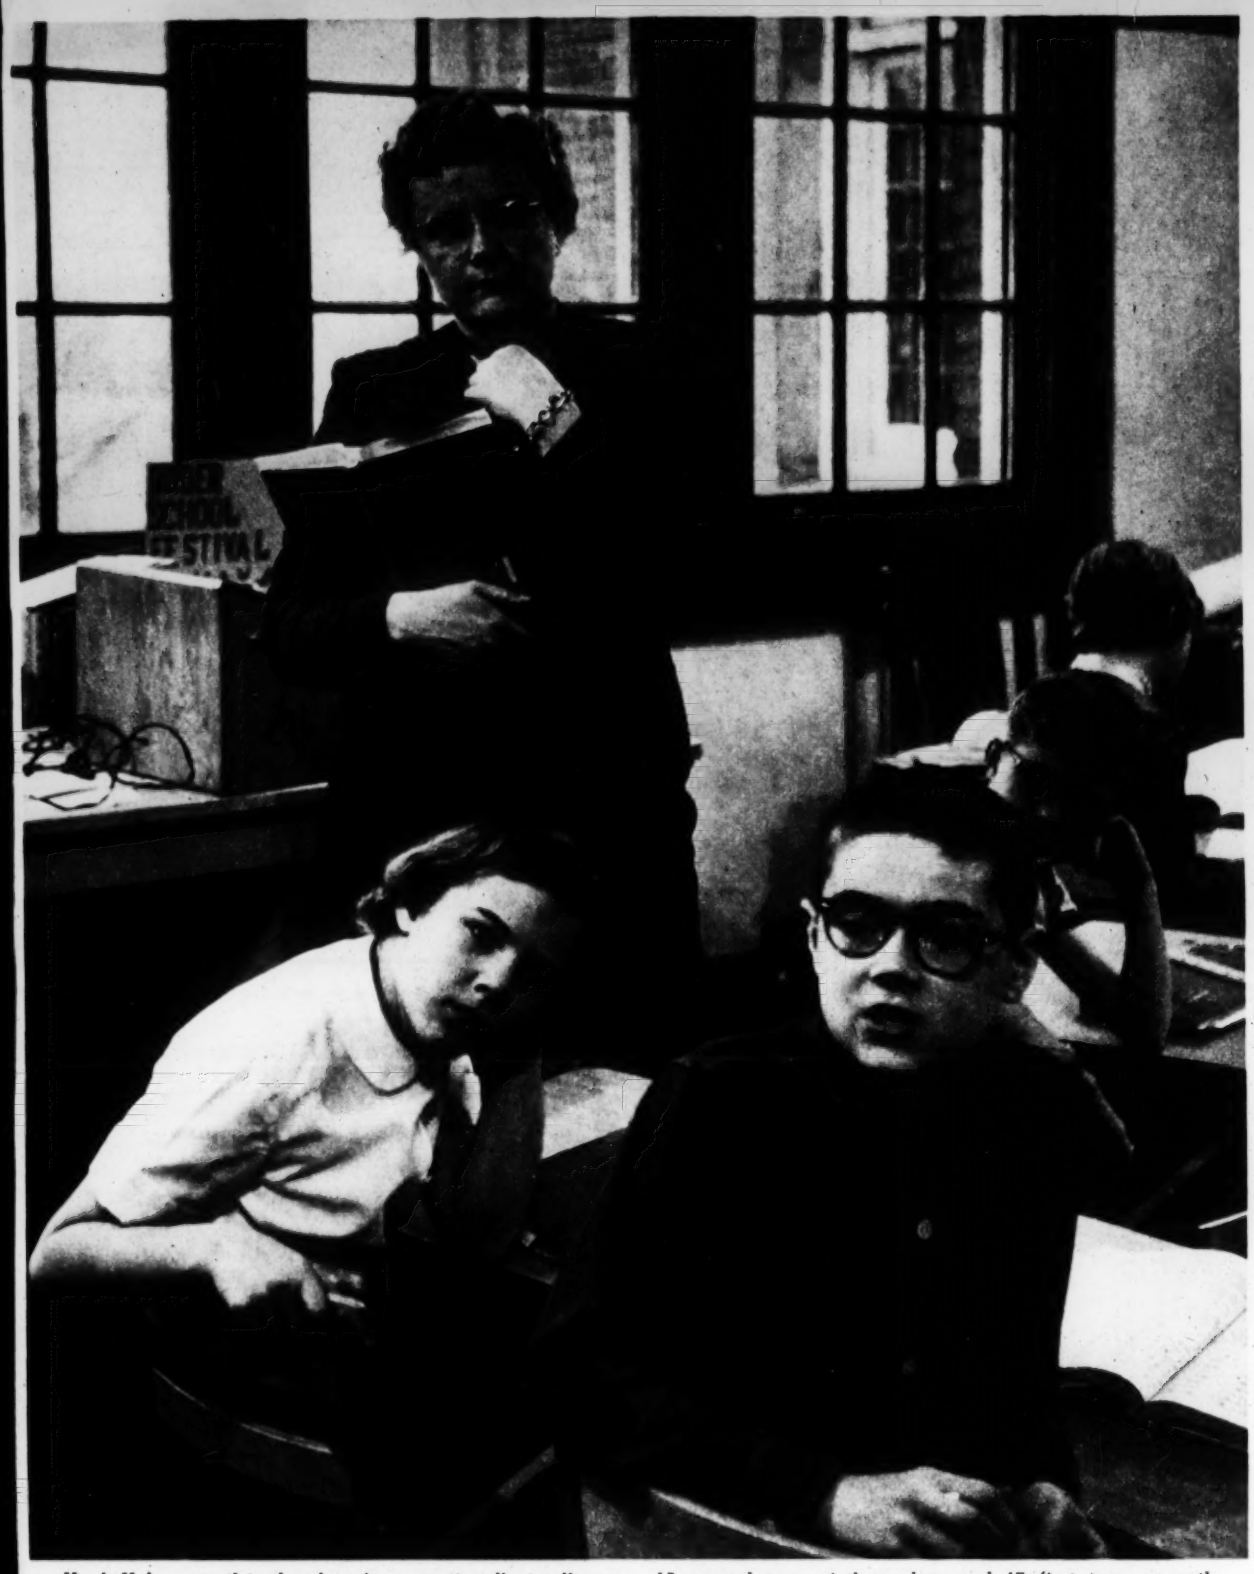

The coal has been shoveled and the boat is lazily drifting, so it's a grand time for lounging on deck. Roy has a smoke, Jack stretches out and Jimmy twangs his banjo. Music for this scene, from a phonograph record, is atmospherically "Ol' Man River."

The Public Schools' 'Brain Rooms' Succeed

Hugh Holt, a pupil in the class for exceptionally intelligent children at Buder School, 5319 Lansdowne avenue, reads his solution of an arithmetic problem from the blackboard. Looking on are Jacqueline Caesar, Philip Keim and Miss Marie Gaffron, the teacher. Class numbers 32, including 15 second-term sixth graders and 17 first-term seventh graders. Room serves seven elementary districts, is one of nine in centrally located schools throughout city. Other classes are in Nottingham, Mullanphy, Garfield, Bates, Ashland, Walnut Park, Scruggs and Hamilton schools.

Pupils gather around intently as Dr. John D. Whitney, dean of faculty at Harris Teachers College, explains workings of his six-inch celestial telescope which he brought on special visit to the Buder class.

Leadership by pupils is fostered in the special rooms. Here Beverly Parker, at blackboard, directs Buder class in singing, with gestures, the French-Canadian folk song "Alouette." Children who play musical instruments are urged to perform for their classmates; book reports and other special projects also are encouraged.

Janet Hradsky, member of the Buder class, with her exhibit which won the top individual award in the physical science group, junior division, at the 1956 Greater St. Louis Science Fair. Of 15 fair entries by members of the Buder class, 13 won prizes.

WITH MANY HIGH HOPES and a few misgivings the St. Louis Public Schools last fall started special classes for exceptionally intelligent sixth graders. This was part of a new Major Learning Program. The plan succeeded (the title did not), and things have run quite smoothly in the "brain rooms." This unofficial "brain rooms" designation sprang up in the schools, and administrators—who themselves stick to official terminology—are pleased by the rather matter-of-fact way the informal name is used by pupils in the regular classes.

Among the unknown factors in establishing the program was whether the special classes would create pupil antagonisms. The children in the regular and special rooms have gotten along fine, which comes as no surprise to some with long and close experience with grade school youngsters.

"One reason for lack of jealousy on the part of the regular pupils and for absence of conceit on the part of the especially gifted children," said a former teacher now doing other work in the system, "might be the fact that little emphasis on brainpower is given in one child's evaluation of another. How far he can throw a ball seems more important."

Parental acceptance also has been gratifying. Enrollment was at parents' option, and of 332 children found eligible for the program 280 were registered. This despite the fact that the classes were established in only nine of the city's 105 elementary school districts, which meant changing schools for children in districts that did not have the classes. During the school year only two pupils have been returned to regular classes at the request of parents, and only five have been sent back because they could not make the grade. The prospect of shifting schools was a principal objection among parents who did not enroll their children.

What of the youngsters themselves? How do they like the "brain rooms"? For the most part, they seem to like them better than they did their regular classes. Some, however, found the transition painful. Scholastic leadership, which was easy before, suddenly became difficult or impossible. Because the regular work was simple for them, some of the children had developed poor study habits and found the going tough when they had to study seriously to keep pace. However, school administrators argue that such adjustments are better made early in school life—rather than in high school or college, where in some cases it is too late.

The pupils take regular sixth-grade subjects plus French, but their work is enriched and supplemented to challenge their intelligence. Their I.Q.s range from 125, minimum required, to 171. Only about 2 per cent of the population fall in the 125-or-higher bracket, the average I.Q. being 100.

"They read and spell well, and on the whole are good in language, so we do not need to devote as much time to drill as we do with normal classes," one of the teachers said. This leaves ample time for supplementary work.

The children's quickness to learn often is matched by a quickness of wit. In one geography session a pupil, drawing various land formations on the blackboard, outlined a plateau. From the back of the room a class member, who apparently still had time to watch TV quiz programs, remarked: "He's now at the first plateau."

Superintendent of Instruction Philip J. Hickey says, "The program's success has exceeded our expectations. We are so satisfied that we will add seventh-grade classes this fall." Plans call for establishment of special eighth-grade classes in the 1957-58 school year to link up with the high school program for especially gifted students, started last autumn.

Just how the special sixth graders have progressed as compared with regular pupils will be determined from extensive tests given last week. Meanwhile, with the first year of the Major Learning Program almost over, the school people feel much like the boy at the blackboard in the geography class. They have reached the first plateau.

St. Louis Educational Experiment, Which Puts Exceptionally Gifted Children in Special Classes, Will Be Expanded Next Term

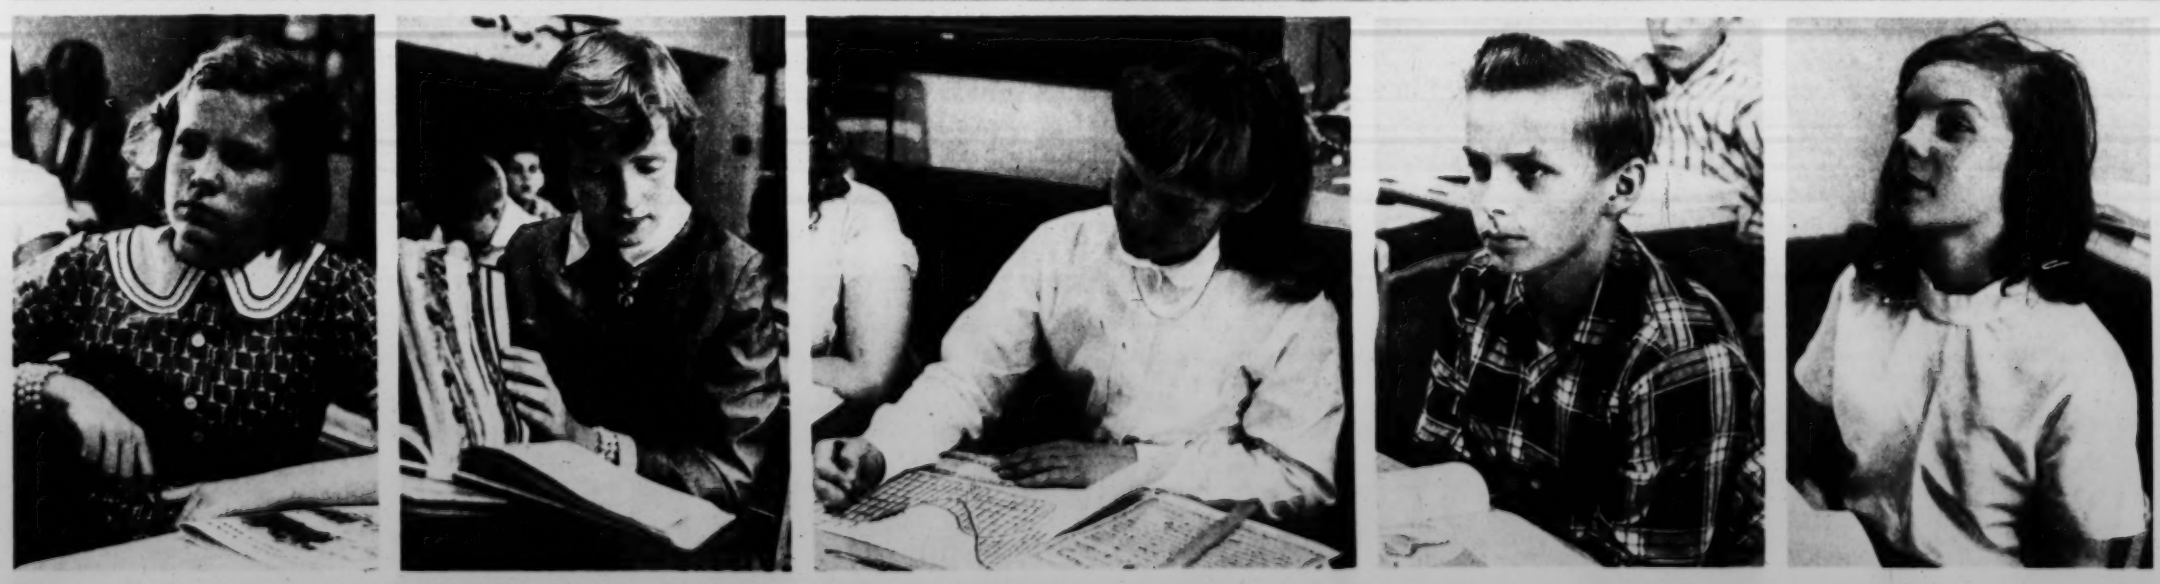

Teacher Lionel LeBeau gets ready response during French recitation in the special class at Buder school. Pace is swift in the nine rooms in the Major Learning Program; most pupils' hands go up quickly when questions are asked. LeBeau spends 40 minutes daily with the Buder pupils, has classes in four other schools. Children in the program have made good progress in French. Spanish and French are being taught experimentally in 15 regular elementary school classes.

Haywood Pitts Jr., seated left, explains water distillation process in science experiment by the special room at Bates School, 1912 North Prairie avenue. The separate room arrangement has afforded the especially gifted children an opportunity to make rapid progress in science work.

As part of their social studies course, pupils in the class at Garfield School, 2612 Wyoming street, have daily program of foreign, national and local news. Martin Johnson, at globe, answers question from David Bates, standing with paper, who has acted as chairman of a simulated radio news program.

PAINTINGS FOR SWAP

Artist Offers Works for Home Equipment, Finds Lively Demand

Painting "Klieg Lights," depicting scene backstage at Municipal Opera, went for vacuum cleaner. Cowdery will paint a pastel portrait in exchange for the electric broiler.

Paintings from left, "Yellow Mums," "Winterset," "Lindell and Kingshighway," were swapped for the kitchen base and wall cabinets behind them. All the paintings used for barter were water colors.

Tommy sits in newly acquired chair-table on porch with toys that also were swapped for "Dancer," "The Wings," and "Campbell House." The Cowderys have one other child, a three-month-old son, Kendrick.

Mrs. Cowdery triumphantly holds suit and dress bartered for paintings "Bridge," lower left, and "From the Corner of Bonaire," above. Painting titled "Balloons" brought in the firewood it leans against.

Photos by JACK GOULD of the PICTURES Staff

Two paintings, "Winter Sky," above, and "Skyline" went for draperies, sink and cabinet front.

WHEN THE COWDERY FAMILY moved from a St. Louis apartment to their own house in Kirkwood, they found themselves short of household furnishings and long on paintings. Tom Cowdery, advertising manager for a chain of furniture stores, is a prolific painter of water colors. He has won several first prizes in St. Louis area competitions, exhibited at several one-man shows.

His wife, Gloria Cowdery, hit upon the idea of barter to acquire goods useful in a new home and to market some 80 paintings on hand. She ran an advertisement in a Kirkwood neighborhood newspaper, stating that "prize-winning Kirkwood artist wants to swap pictures for what have you?"

Replies were immediate and numerous, and the what-have-yous varied. The Cowderys now have fewer paintings, but they have, among other swap items, tickets to the Illinois State Fair, a kitchen sink, draperies, a load of wood, and 75 feet of fencing. Their son, Tommy, 2 years old, picked up a toy grader and a sand loader. A man is coming to install the Cowderys' air-conditioning unit. Mrs. Cowdery has a new dress and a winter suit, an appointment with a dentist for a partial denture, all to be paid for with paintings.

Tom Cowdery works in basement studio of his new home at 822 Evans street in Kirkwood, on a pastel portrait of Debbie Holden, 7 years old. This portrait will be swapped for cash. Cowdery received several other portrait commissions to be paid for with cash. He teaches two classes in advertising promotion at Washington University.

Mrs. Donald Kruger, right, and Mrs. Cowdery discuss trade of "Carrousel" and "Ballet Dancer" for picket fencing and Dutch door.

Sliced-off Bow of Lumber Boat Goes Down In Pacific

Bow of the Howard Olson slowly sinks in a sea awash with debris after the lumber schooner had been rammed and sliced in two by another ship. Early last Monday the 2477-ton Olson was plowing through calm and familiar sea, en route from Los Angeles to Coos Bay, Oregon. She carried a crew of 29 men, but no cargo. Out of the predawn darkness loomed the 10,662-ton Marine Leopard, a freighter bound from San Francisco for the East Coast. The larger ship rammed into the smaller Olson amidships, cutting her in half. Four seamen of the Olson were killed. Twenty-five of her crewmen were rescued by the Leopard; a freighter, a tug, a tanker and cutters of the Coast Guard came to help on the busy seaway eight miles south of Point Sur, California. One of the rescued men was seriously injured. None of the Leopard's men were hurt. With a rent in her battered bow, the 496-foot freighter limped back to port. The afterend of the 253-foot Olson quickly sank; the bow went down about five hours later.

FIERY END OF A RACE

At an Austrian motorcycle race in a suburb of Vienna, M. Heisinger, clad in tight-fitting coveralls and stocking cap, roared across the finish line but lost control of his vehicle. STRIFE IN THE MEDITERRANEAN

More Lives Are Lost, Bitter Tension Grows in Greece, Cyprus and Algeria

Student injured in Athens rioting is carried from street. Three were killed and 124 hurt in the outbreaks.

RIOT IN ATHENS

Athens police advance warily on massed anti-British rioters, some of whom continue to hurl rocks and boards. The rioting, worst in Athens since World War II, erupted over the death sentences imposed by the British on two 23-year-old Greek Cypriots for terrorist shootings on Cyprus. The two youths were hanged a few hours after the riots had been brought under control.

International News Photos except as noted

Algeria stretches 650 miles on Mediterranean; populous northern part has been under French rule since 1830s, rest was conquered later. Cyprus, governed by British since 1878, lies on important sea and air routes.

Map by EDGAR KULLA of the PICTURES Staff

Tormented by rioters, two of whom hold rocks, a harried policeman strides along with an unruly Athenian in tow. Demonstrators smashed windows of the United States Information Service offices.

IN CYPRUS and in Algeria, at opposite ends of the Mediterranean, parallel patterns are being woven in bitterness and bloodshed. In both places terrorists are seeking to fulfill the nationalist aspirations widely held among the local populations. In both places the ruling powers are taking stern, desperate measures to put down the terrorism and are refusing to negotiate with the nationalists until the violence ends. But the terrorists, pointing to fruitless efforts at peaceful solutions in the past, persist in their harassment of the authorities. In neither Cyprus nor Algeria are there any apparent prospects of an early end to the bloodletting.

On Cyprus, underground terrorists keep up a campaign of sporadic violence despite iron-fisted measures by the British, who rule the island as a crown colony. Nearly 30 British service men have been killed since the terrorism broke out last year in support of demands for union with Greece by the island's Greek-speaking residents. They make up 400,000 of Cyprus' 500,000 population. While agreeable to some concessions, the British are unwilling to let go of the strategic island —their last major military stronghold in the uneasy Middle East, where Britain has vital oil holdings. One result of the continuing trouble on Cyprus is a festering of anti-British feeling in Greece. This jeopardizes the North Atlantic Treaty Organization alliance of which both nations are members.

In efforts to crush the revolt in Algeria, France has stripped her NATO forces, called up thousands of reservists. By mid-June some 380,000 French troops will be engaged in the North African territory. The French aim is to pacify the land, section by section, and to neutralize the guerrilla rebels, estimated to number only about 15,000. This strategy has not succeeded so far. Guerrilla attacks have continued, with casualties on both sides running about 200 weekly. The revolt started 18 months ago over demands that the 8,500,000 Arabs be granted equal treatment with the 1,200,000 French settlers, who are opposed to permitting any concessions. Now it is questionable whether the Arabs will agree to anything short of independence, which France is in no mood to grant.

GIFT BUSINESS IN DINOSAUR TRACKS

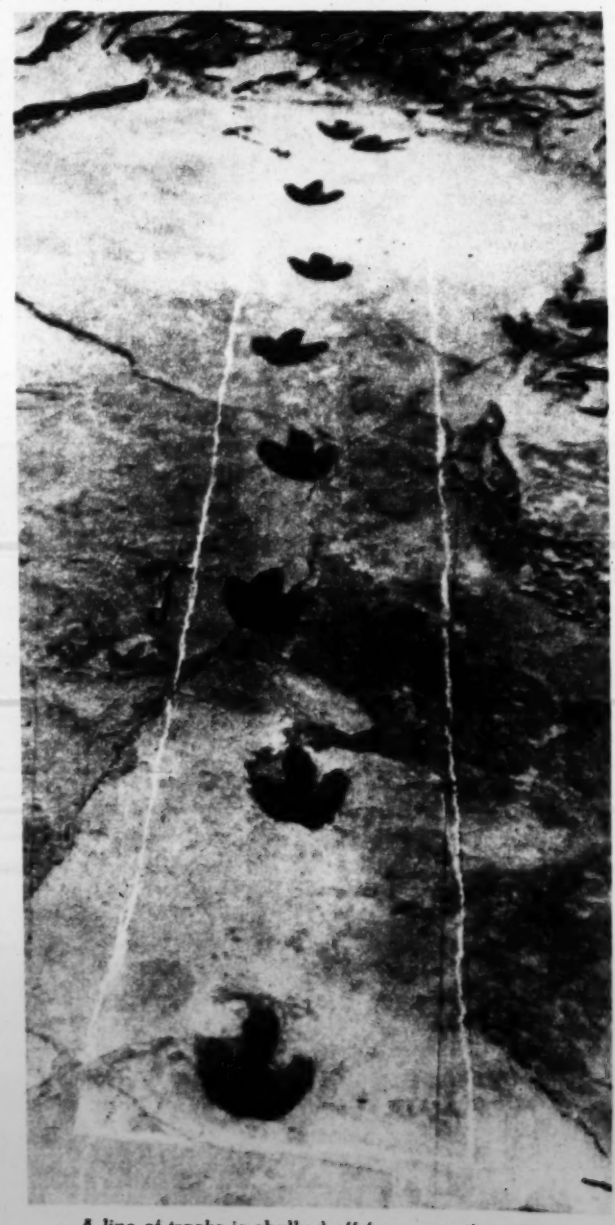

Imprints Are Quarried From River Bed

Nash uses a power saw to cut shale in the river bed. This is ticklish work because the shale is thin and brittle.
United Press Photos

ON THE THEORY that even people who have "everything" are unlikely to have any dinosaur tracks around the house, Carlton Nash of South Hadley, Massachusetts, has built up a thriving gift-shop business in supplying this lack. Nash's stock in trade is footprints left in the mud of what is now the Connecticut River Valley by the prehistoric creatures. The mud hardened into shale and the preserved footprints are as clearly outlined as the day the dinosaurs were on the prowl. Nash carefully quarries the thin layers of shale and sells the prints for $6 to $100 each, according to size.

He offers the tracks for sale, singly or in sets, as conversation pieces, book ends, paperweights, garden curios. His customers seem to have no trouble in devising other ways to make use of them. One cemented a set of dinosaur tracks on the steps leading up to his front door.

A line of tracks is chalked off for excavation. These footprints were shipped to Newton, Iowa, to be used in the garden of Fred Maytag, washing machine manufacturer. Nash has worked down through 29 layers of shale, removed some 3000 tracks.

NAUTILUS' FIRST NEW YORK VISIT

The U.S.S. Nautilus, escorted by a flotilla of small craft, glides up the Hudson River on its first visit to New York City, last Sunday. Ferryboats and tugs whistled hearty welcomes to the Nautilus, the world's first atomic-powered submarine, which spent nearly four hours in the harbor. In the past year the Nautilus has traveled 37,000 miles, including 21,000 submerged, and has not yet used up her original few pounds of uranium fuel.

Crew members relax in their quarters during cruise to New York from the Nautilus' base at Groton, Connecticut. Although area is cramped, crew has more living space than on standard subs.

A CENTURY OLD —OR BETTER

One hundred years or longer have been lived by the women shown here. Their birthdays go back to or beyond the time in United States history when there were only 31 states and when James Buchanan, elected in 1856, was President. Mrs. Marie LaCroix, above, who now lives in Detroit, was born in Salerno, Italy, a century ago. She came to the United States in 1921, had 11 children of whom three are living. Among other greetings, she received a birthday card from President Eisenhower.

Mrs. Charlotte Bonner of Chicago gives an elaborate wink as she displays congratulatory messages on her 106th birthday. She also got one from the President. She has outlived three husbands and four children.

One daughter of Mrs. Lucinda Mallory recently celebrated her ninetieth birthday, another her seventieth. Mrs. Mallory, of Wichita, Kansas, is 112 years old. She has had six children and two husbands. Three of the children are still living.

When she was 13 years old, Mrs. Annie Twigg left her native England, and she has lived in this country for the last 87 years. Her home is Wheaton, Illinois. She has four children, eight grandchildren, 16 great-grandchildren.

MODERN POSTERS

Museum Assembles a Set for Social Agencies

THE MUSEUM OF MODERN ART in New York, which has helped encourage good design in such widely assorted fields as architecture, typography and street signs, has taken on a poster project. For the Family Service Association of America, it commissioned both photographers and artists to work on posters of contemporary design. Their purpose, to call attention to counseling agencies and enlist social workers.

In St. Louis, the posters will be used by the Family and Children's Service of Greater St. Louis and the Jewish Family Service Agency. Some 265 agencies in the association will use them in other cities. Each will print its own name on the posters it uses. A collection of the posters will be exhibited at Kiel Auditorium today through May 25 at the National Conference of Social Work. Those shown here were made by Photographer Wayne Miller (upper left) and by Artists Costantino Nivola (top center), Robert Andrew Parker (below) and Ben-Zion (bottom of page).

Sweet Potato Pork Pie, a One-Dish Meal

3. Crust is made by blending shortening into mixed dry ingredients, then adding the mashed sweet potatoes and milk. It is kneaded and rolled out before cutting with biscuit cutter.

By MERNA LAZIER

FOR OCCASIONS when a nourishing, one-dish meal is indicated, a baked sweet potato-crusted pork pie fills the bill nicely. Miss Merle Tubbesing, comptometer operator for a St. Louis chemical firm, prepares this dish for special luncheons served by the Red Cross Volunteer Canteen at parties for patients in veterans' hospitals. Because it can be readily cooked in field kitchens, the pie also is served at disaster scenes.

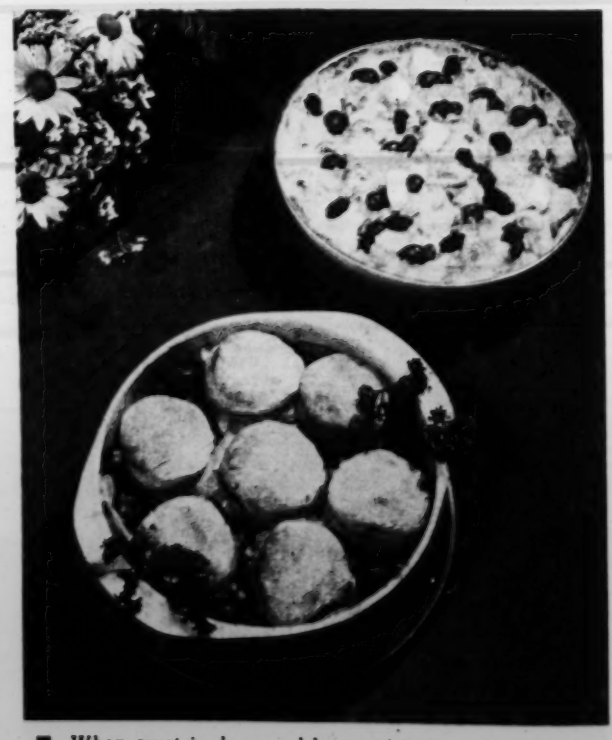

After cutting meat into cubes, Miss Tubbesing cooks it with bay leaf, peppercorns, salt and parsley, in water to cover, until tender. Onions and cut celery are sauteed in fat until lightly yellowed, then flour is stirred in. Stock strained from the meat is added, and mixture is cooked until thickened, stirring constantly. The meat is put in. To make crust, flour, baking powder and salt are blended with shortening, then mashed sweet potatoes and milk are added, and mixture is kneaded for about 20 seconds. Dough is rolled on floured canvas to one-half-inch thickness and cut with large biscuit cutter. Meat combined with onion and celery mixture is placed in baking dish in alternate layers with sliced apples, then topped with rounds of sweet potato crust and baked in 450-degree oven for about 30 minutes. Serves six.

INGREDIENTS

One and one-half pounds lean pork	For the crust
Small bay leaf	One cup sifted flour
Few peppercorns	Three teaspoons baking powder
Two teaspoons salt	One and one-half teaspoons salt
One rib celery	Three tablespoons shortening
Three sprigs parsley	One cup mashed sweet potatoes (do not use canned)
Two medium onions	One-fourth cup milk
Two tablespoons shortening
Two tablespoons flour
One cup stock from meat
Three apples sliced thin

4. Meat mixture and sliced apples are arranged in baking dish in alternate layers. Pastry rounds are placed on top. Pie is baked in a very hot oven.

5. When crust is done and browned it is ready to serve. A molded fruit salad makes an ideal accompaniment.

JAZZ IN ST. MARK'S SQUARE

The historic buildings of St. Mark's Square resound with the hot licks of an American jazz band in Venice, a city famed as a repository of old-world culture. The outdoor concert, played by the United States Army Forty-ninth Military Band, drew a crowd that spread over most of the city's principal square and site of her most striking buildings — St. Mark's Church and the Doge's Palace. The American band is part of a task force.

Sky Diver Makes Delayed Parachute Leap Right on Target

Sky diving, a kind of precision parachute jumping, has become an international sport. The participant leaps from a step attached to an airplane landing gear, plunges in a six-second free fall as he twists and turns his body to keep it on target, a cross inside a circle marked on the ground. Then he opens his parachute. One of the seven men on the American sky diving team is shown here just after launching himself in space, with the target area visible below. The team worked out at Robbinsville, New Jersey, for the World Parachuting Championships to be held at Moscow July 25 to August 8.

The diver, turning and twisting, uses body movements to control direction of his descent. Target is at lower right.

Falling at more than 100 miles an hour, the jumper has not yet pulled ripcord to open parachute. He continues to maneuver arms and legs to guide him toward target.

After his prolonged free fall, the sky diver opens his parachute. Here, he ends jump directly on an arm of the cross. Tugging on shroud lines controls direction of drift when 'chute has been opened.

Here Is Important Information For You From The United States Marine Corps!

Since August 9, 1955, changes in Federal Legislation and Marine Corps Regulations have altered the picture for everyone who is serving or will be serving in the U.S. Marine Corps.

This message is published in an effort to bring young men (and their parents) up to date on the opportunities now available to them in the U.S. Marine Corps, Regular or Reserve.

The chart below outlines the various enlistments now being offered and sets forth the qualifications one must have to be eligible for these enlistments.

FOOTNOTES

(A) Draft exempt provided participant maintains satisfactory drill attendance by attending required drill periods and summer training. The 17-18½ year old is governed by quota and man's desire insofar as the date of his active duty is concerned. He could commence his training as late as six (6) months after enlistment.

(B) Will not be draft exempt by being a member of this program.

(C) Participatees in this age group may serve a 2 or 3 year active duty period any time during their period of military obligation.

(D) If you entered the Marine Corps since 9 August 1955, whether you enlisted in the regular Marine Corps or directly in the Marine Corps Reserve, you have an overall obligation of 6 years. Your period of active service plus time in the Ready Reserve must total five years, then another year in the Standby Reserve. If you enlisted directly in the Marine Corps Reserve you enlisted for 6 years and you signed an agreement to serve on active duty for two years during the period of your 6-year enlistment. The rest of your obligation is normally 3 years in the Ready Reserve and 1 additional year in the Standby Reserve.

(E) While serving on active duty all members of the Marine Corps (Regular and Reserve) receive the pay and allowances of their rank or rating as prescribed by law. Personnel who serve on active duty are entitled to the following benefits: National Service Life Insurance; Hospital, Medical and Dental Care; Disability Retirement; Death Gratuity; Accrued Leave Payment; GI Bill Benefits (except that educational benefits do not accrue to those entering on active duty after 31 January 1955); Re-employment Rights and Civil Service veteran's preference.

TODAY MORE THAN EVER BEFORE, THE MARINE CORPS OFFERS YOUNG MEN THE OPPORTUNITY OF OBTAINING THE MOST VALUABLE POSSESSION A MAN CAN HAVE—CONFIDENCE IN ONE'S ABILITIES! IT MIGHT BE SAID THAT THIS ONE THING, "A MARINE'S CONFIDENCE IN HIS ABILITIES," IS WHAT GOES TO MAKE UP THE GREATER PART OF THE DIFFERENCE!

Broadway Hit As a Movie

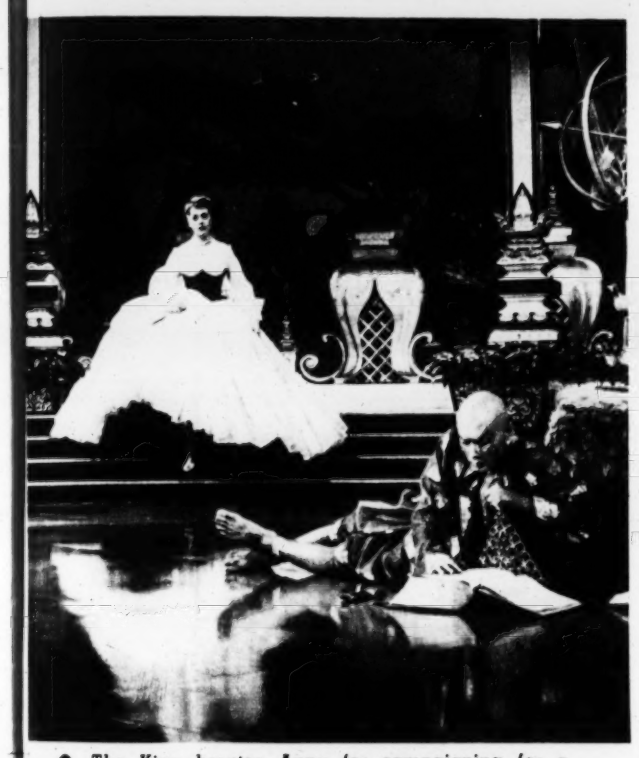

Yul Brynner and Deborah Kerr in Film "The King and I"

1. The King of Siam (Yul Brynner) has imported a governess from England to instruct his numerous children. He introduces the governess, Mrs. Anna Leonowens (Deborah Kerr), and her son, Louis (Rex Thompson), to his royal wives. One of them, the King's most recent bride, Tuptim (Rita Moreno) kneels for the introduction. (The movie is an adaptation of Rodgers and Hammerstein's Broadway play, "The King and I," in which Brynner also played the King.)

2. Anna is captivated by the friendly wives and children of the King, decides to remain in Siam despite the King's failure to give her a house outside the Royal Palace as he had promised. As Anna teaches the royal children to dance and sing in English, Crown Prince Chululongkorn (Patrick Adiarte, left), heir apparent to the throne, disdains to join the younger children in dancing but can't resist keeping time with one foot from the sideline.

3. The King berates Anna for campaigning for a home outside the palace, and for teaching the royal wives and children songs and poems about houses and homes. After being puzzled by questions from the Crown Prince about Anna's teaching that slaves should be freed, the King calls Anna to dictate a letter to President Abraham Lincoln. He offers the "American monarch" a pair of elephants to help him win his war.

4. The Burmese nobleman who had brought Tuptim to Siam as a gift for the King realizes he is in love with her. They meet secretly and Lun Tha (Carlos Rivas) tells Tuptim, who returns his affection, that they will escape together.

5. At a banquet, Tuptim presents a Siamese ballet version of Uncle Tom's Cabin. It has been adapted and narrated by Tuptim as a plea for the King to free her and the other slaves. Tuptim attempts to escape and is captured. The King ignores pleas of Anna, declares he will himself whip Tuptim.

6. Anna is about to depart for England, but finding that the King is dying, she rushes to his side. She promises to stay and guide the new young King, her pupil as the former Crown Prince. King Chululongkorn announces his first act will be to do away with undignified groveling in the presence of the King of Siam.

AFTER CANOEING TRAGEDY

Scoutmaster, in Shock, Tells How Three Drowned in Pennsylvania Creek

His face reflecting his shock and anguish, Scoutmaster Clyde Watson holds his head (top photo) as he tells of how another scoutmaster and two Boy Scouts were drowned in a canoeing accident on French Creek near Union City, Pennsylvania. Thirty-year-old Watson, in charge of a party of 10 in five canoes, was hospitalized for shock shortly after photo was made. On the rain-swollen creek, the lead canoe was overturned by a submerged tree, the other canoes crashed into it and also upset. Watson repeatedly dove in unsuccessful rescue attempts. Drowning victims, who were in the first canoe, were Scoutmaster Fred Coe of Union City and Scouts Harvey Brady, 16 years old, and Robert Sandoski, 14, both of Hammett. The seven other boys made their way safely ashore. In the lower photo, automobiles gather alongside French Creek where the tragedy occurred.

Live in Paddock Hills . . .
a refreshing new community of fine ranch homes

by Mayer-Raisher-Mayer
"Builders of Fine Homes for three generations"

Architect's rendering of new Ferguson-Florissant R-2 Public Elementary School to be located in the center of Paddock Hills. Plans have been made to begin construction this year.

PLANNING PADDOCK HILLS

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE ST. LOUIS HOME BUYER

After three generations of building fine homes for discriminating St. Louisans, this family of builders looks forward to Paddock Hills as our finest achievement.

Paddock Hills was conceived from the first stages of planning as a complete residential community. From the health and safety needs such as sewers, streets and sidewalks, to the conveniently located schools, churches and shopping centers, every effort has been made to instill lasting beauty and value into the neighborhood. We have completely eliminated the "subdivision look" with large lots and a wide variety of attractive homes, placed selectively on winding drives and private courts.

The Paddock Hills homes themselves took more than twelve months of careful planning. Every imaginable item needed to build you a truly complete luxury home was included. By designing seven entirely different plans we are able to easily answer any family home need.

Rather than cut corners on quality or offer a "stripped down" economy home, it is our pledge to continue to build finely constructed, luxuriously complete homes, and through vast quantity purchasing and efficient production methods, offer these homes to you at the lowest possible prices.

PRACTICAL AND BEAUTIFUL . . . SuperSanitas

PLASTIC COATED FABRIC WALL COVERING

Never before have you had such a wide choice of lovely patterns and colorings. You'll wonder how a wall covering so downright practical could be so beautiful.

SuperSanitas rarely needs cleaning because a special waterproof top-coat seals the colors in and keeps soil on top. Yet you can actually scrub it without harm!

SuperSanitas withstands accidents and hard knocks. It's almost accident proof. Only the most fade-resistant colors can pass the rigid SuperSanitas tests for sunfastness. Multiple undercoats of latex—plus a strong fabric base—are the secret of SuperSanitas' amazing wear.

REST ASSURED . . . WITH Coleman

You can rest assured on those long, cold winter nights that your family will sleep in warm comfort through the dependable efficiency of Coleman's gas forced-air heating system. In Paddock Hills we have used the newest method of engineered heating: the perimeter system.

Inconspicuous floor registers placed around the outside perimeter of the home under the picture windows eliminate drafty rooms and distribute even, comfortable heat without the discomfort of hot blasts of air. The powerful 100,000 B.T.U. input Coleman gas furnace is large enough to heat the basement as well as the first floor.

Your Paddock Hills home has fully insulated walls and ceilings, all openings completely weatherstripped, and storm doors on both front and back doors. With these helpful partners, the Coleman thermostatically controlled forced air heating system delivers unbelievable comfort and economy, year after year.

IN PADDOCK HILLS . . .
FLOR-EVER VINYL WAS THE OBVIOUS ANSWER

In the planning of the Paddock Hills home, Mayer-Raisher-Mayer found a need for a practical and beautiful floor covering for the much-used and abused places, such as kitchens, TV rooms, halls, and informal dining areas. Flor-Ever Vinyl was the obvious answer. And for good reasons: Flor-Ever Vinyl is an amazing non-porous, power-polished surface into which dirt can't soak or "grip", a natural vinyl gloss that needs less waxing and sparkles brighter when it is waxed—plus astonishing durability. But above all, Flor-Ever is superb for beauty. And about this, no words or pictures can do justice. The rich glowing tones, the magnificent decorator colors . . . Come out to Paddock Hills today, and see for yourself.

A GREAT MAN REMEMBERS . . .

A light in the darkness

by DR. ALBERT SCHWEITZER

THE AUTHOR (right), world-renowned physician, musician and humanitarian, sent this tribute to PARADE from his hospital in Lambaréné, French Equatorial Africa.

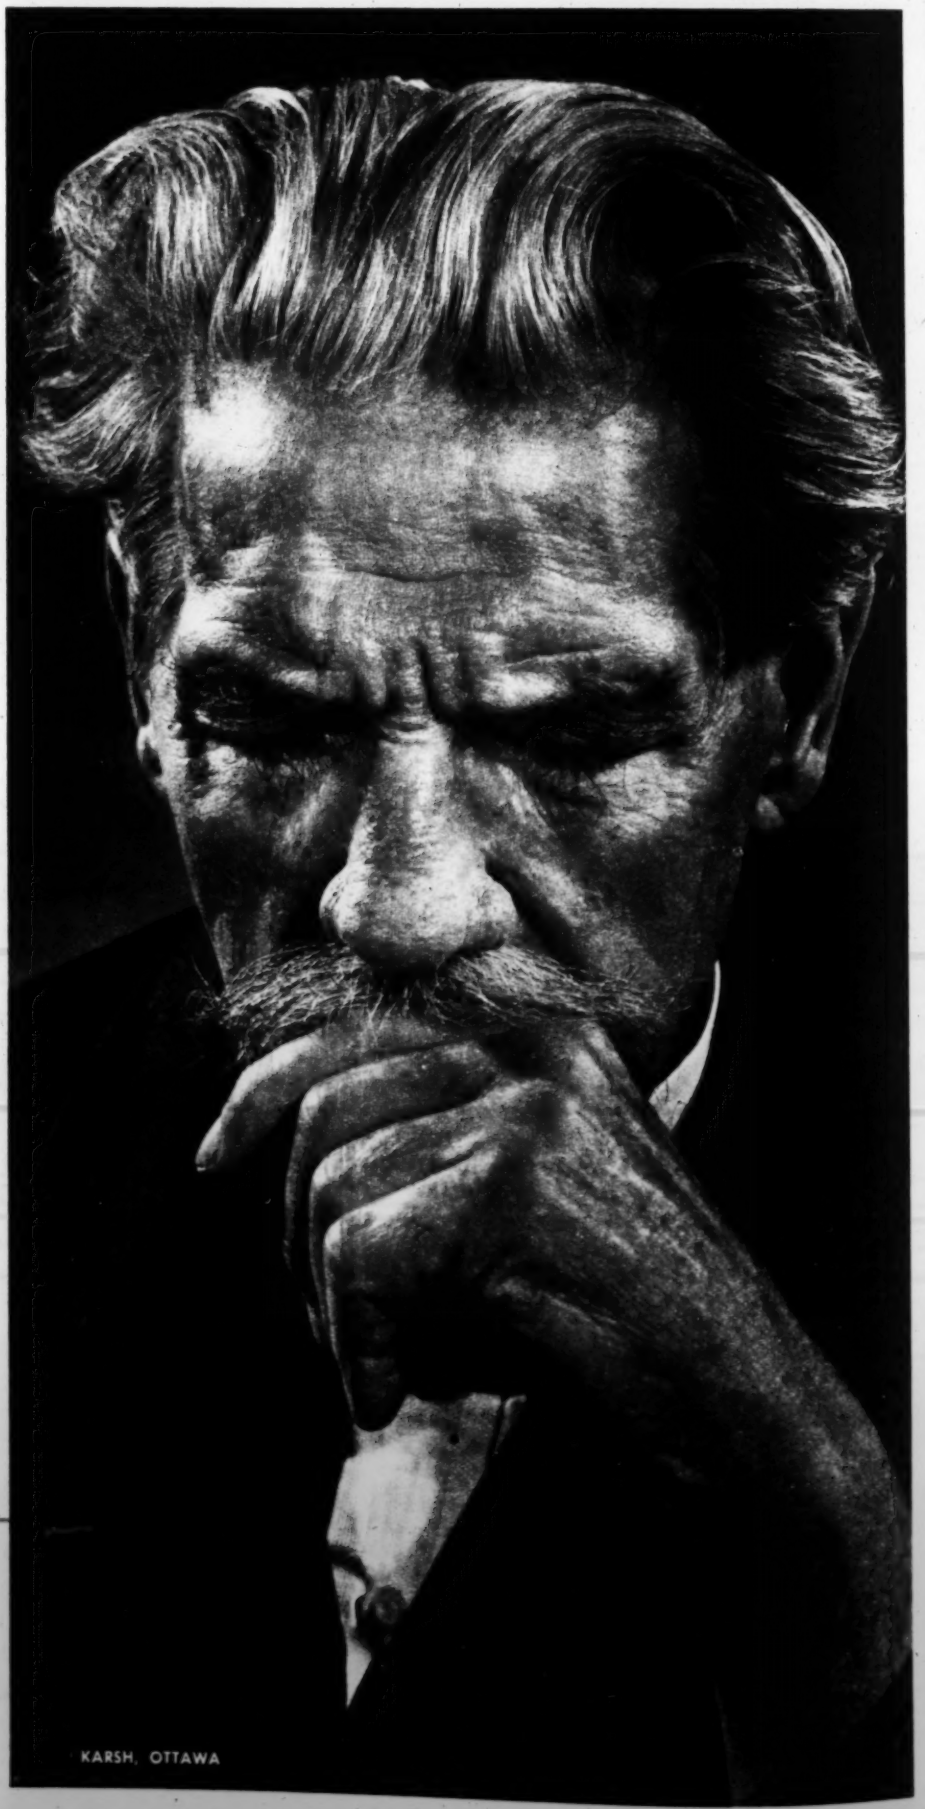

In my childhood, I heard many conversations about the Red Cross. At the time, this great international organization was relatively new. Yet people were already speaking enthusiastically about it. The hope they held that it would help put an end to the horrors of war, and thereafter to war itself, has not yet been realized. However, it has justified its existence in two horrible wars, and in peacetime moments of need.

To the Red Cross, millions of human beings owe their very existence. Thanks to it — and institutions like it — a humane concern for others continues to exist, even in the moral confusion of today.

For me, the Red Cross is more than an institution. It stands for an ideal — one in which humanity must think, feel and act with compassion toward the world's suffering peoples.

It encourages us to aspire to a happier world in which all are brothers — to continue to hope for this miracle.

To me, the Red Cross is a light in the darkness. We all owe a debt of gratitude to those who set it there so many years ago. And it is the duty of all of us to see to it that it does not go out.

How Tall Will Your Baby Grow?

Food tips for trips

Does your baby sit safely?

Little baby, soft and new—
The whole world smiles
because of you.

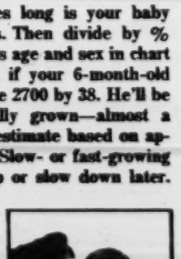

WHEN he's fully grown how big will your baby be? Growth studies answer this fascinating question with remarkable accuracy: The average 2-year-old boy and 1½-year-old girl are about half as tall as they'll be when adults—given nourishing food and good health.

AGE	BOYS	GIRLS
	Approx. % adult height
2 yrs.	49	52
1½ yrs.	46	49
1 yr.	42	47
6 mo.	38	40
1 mo.	30	32
Birth	29	31

• How many inches long is your baby now? Add two zeros. Then divide by % shown for your baby's age and sex in chart above. For example, if your 6-month-old boy is 27″ now, divide 2700 by 38. He'll be about 71″ when fully grown—almost a 6-footer. This is an estimate based on approximate averages. Slow- or fast-growing babies may shoot up or slow down later.

• He suits you—big or little—and he knows it! When you smile and talk happy-talk at mealtimes, that makes him feel good—helps him want to eat all his tummy can hold.

• No new foods on trips—good rule for travel-with-baby. Stick with his favorites. If your baby's tiny, try to go someplace and stay. Don't tour around. On trips, baby food in glass jars is handier than ever. Especially Heinz better-tasting dinners: Strained Vegetables and Lamb, Beef or Bacon—each a meal-in-a-jar.

• If baby rejects cereal the first time your doctor suggests it, try another flavor next time. Heinz makes four precooked cereals—Rice, Barley, Oatmeal and Mixed Cereals (wheat, oats and corn)—all fortified with enriching iron that baby needs.

• Giving baby a safe place to sit helps prevent falls. Safest: a seat-in-a-table. Next: a broad-based high chair. Let Dad feed baby sometimes. People get better acquainted fast over good food.

• This daily diet for babies 6 to 9 months is merely a menu guide. Make your own substitutions. If baby is tired of vegetables, offer fruits for a while. Many better-tasting Heinz fruits contain similar minerals and vitamins and the same amount of roughage as vegetables.

6 Tbs. Heinz Mixed Cereal
2 Tbs. Heinz Strained Egg Yolk
1 Can Heinz Strained Orange Juice
1 Quart Milk • 1 Heinz Teething Biscuit
½ jar Heinz Strained Lamb
½ jar Heinz Strained Carrots
½ jar Heinz Vegetables and Bacon
½ jar Heinz Strained Plums and Farina
½ jar Heinz Orange Custard Pudding

• Have you tried tasting baby's food? Heinz chefs have developed recipes to make the most particular little eater enjoy nourishing foods. Heinz kitchens are close to the choicest growing regions, so no goodness gets lost between garden and kettle. Heinz has been noted for better flavor for 87 years.

THE ARMY'S NEW

GRASSHOPPER PLANES

Weird craft anticipate atom-war needs

"DEFLECTED SLIPSTREAM": Prop-wash, forced downward by big flaps on wing, supports plane near ground. During forward flight flaps retract.

DUCTED FANS, made by shrouding propellers, multiply lifting power. Rotated through 90° angle, they let plane fly horizontally or vertically.

PARADE EXCLUSIVE

"TILTING WING" can rise or land vertically with wing as shown. For high-speed flight, wing is tilted forward to the conventional position.

by JACK ANDERSON and FRED BLUMENTHAL PARADE WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENTS

WASHINGTON.

Because atomic warfare offers so many new problems, U.S. Army planners here are coming up with some of the darnedest aircraft ever conceived. On this page are artists' conceptions of three which will be flying within 18 months (and which also may well be the forerunners of tomorrow's private planes).

As Army strategists see it, future battlefields will extend for hundreds of miles; that means troops will be scattered over a vast area. "We must be highly mobile," a spokesman told PARADE. "To concentrate troops for any length of time could be fatal. If an atomic shell landed —" He didn't need to finish.

Our new, dispersed atomic Army must be supplied by fast, low-flying planes freed from formal airfields with their long runways and fixed installations. Thus, Army designers have produced the weird but efficient "family" of planes illustrated here — the "jeeps" of atomic warfare. They will be rugged, maneuverable, versatile; cheap to produce, easy to operate and maintain. They will fly faster than a helicopter. For tactical purposes they will hug the ground, hopping over obstacles like giant grasshoppers.

Two scientific breakthroughs have made these new planes possible: 1) development of small gas-turbine engines which produce twice as much horsepower for their weight as conventional small piston engines; 2) development of high-lift devices, such as ducted fans and double-hinged flaps, which make possible near-vertical takeoffs. The planes may be made of nonmetallic materials, such as plastic or rubber, to speed up manufacturing time — and reduce odds of radar detection.

Such a plane can land in a small clearing, be hidden under the nearest available tree. Adds an Army colonel: "These planes could quickly move an artillery battery — say, our guided-missile site. They could deliver agents behind enemy lines, fly medical supplies to isolated places, evacuate wounded, carry a TV camera to spot enemy targets, deliver atomic warheads to our atomic artillery sites."

Army officers stress: "These planes are no competition to the Air Force. We believe the top speed doesn't have to be more than 350 mph. At that speed and the treetop altitudes, they'll be immune from anti-aircraft fire. While the Air Force is flying as high as she can, we want to fly as low as we can. But we'll both be fighting the war in our own way." ■

ON-SCREEN as "The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit" (l.), Peck contrasts with man in dinner jacket (r.), snapped off-screen and dining with his new wife.

The untold story of

Gregory Peck

You know him as the No. 1 star of 1956. Now meet the proud, shy, hard-working man behind the star... First of two parts

by LLOYD SHEARER
PARADE WEST COAST CORRESPONDENT

HOLLYWOOD.

JUDGING BY THE early box-office returns on The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit and the advance ballyhoo on the soon-to-be-released Moby Dick, the most popular motion-picture star of 1956 will almost surely be Eldred Gregory Peck.

And deservedly so. At 40, after 21 profitable films (not counting these two) and 13 eventful years in the movie game, this gaunt, inscrutable leading man has come to be recognized as one of Hollywood's most careful, conscientious and industrious actors.

During the filming of Flannel Suit, for example, Peck stayed awake nights devising what actors call bits of business — mannerisms, movements, even lines to make the characterization more interesting, more complete. If called upon to play a scene which he considered trite, he would politely insist that a more original approach be taken.

"Greg is one actor," says Nunnally Johnson, who wrote and directed the picture, "who simply refuses to take the easy way out. He just will not act a part in a hackneyed way. He tries to make it different, to infuse it with dimension. He's a meticulous craftsman.

"In Flannel Suit we had a flashback in which Greg hurls a hand grenade that kills his buddy. He refuses to believe the soldier is dead until he himself can carry him to a doctor in the rear area. Now, I was willing to let Greg carry his dead buddy in a Fireman's Lift, the body slung across his shoulders. He wouldn't have it. It would be much more effective, he insisted, if he carried the soldier cradled in his arms. It was back-breaking that way, but it also was more dramatic and more effective, and Greg sized that up instantly."

Peck's painstaking dedication to detail is famous here. Directors and players who have worked with him — John Huston, Alfred Hitchcock, Ingrid Bergman, Ethel Barrymore, Ava Gardner, Charles Laughton — agree with Johnson's assertion: "Greg Peck works harder than practically any other actor in the world."

An intelligent, somber and sensitive man with a simple credo — "I take my work very seriously" — Peck is so fiercely proud of his reputation as a cooperative and hard-working actor that the only time he ever threatened to sue anyone was two years ago when he felt that his reputation had been jeopardized.

The occasion was a Hollywood trade paper's erroneous report that Peck had been fighting with Johnson on the production of Night People in Munich, Germany. George Chasen, Peck's watchful agent, cabled him a quotation from the paper. Peck read it, and his face crimsoned. Marching to Johnson, he thrust the cable in front of him and demanded: "Have you and I ever fought?"

Johnson glanced at the cable, then advised Peck to forget it.

"Not on your life," Peck reportedly stormed. "I'm going to sue for libel. I think I can collect. They're damaging my reputation as a professional actor. I've never fought with a director or held up production in my life."

"If you feel that strongly about it," Johnson conceded, "I'll be your first witness."

Later Peck relented and reluctantly dropped the idea, but the item roiled him for weeks.

Just why he feels so strongly about this is something of a puzzler to his colleagues here. Some feel that Peck — a rangy, virile man who stands 6' 3", weighs 185 — is actually a complex, bedeviled personality, filled with self-doubt concerning his basic acting ability. They point to a significant fact: that no critic of recognized stature has ever described any Peck performance as truly great. "Good" and "adequate" are the two adjectives most frequently employed to praise his work. Inevitably, this must evoke a reaction in Peck himself.

Says one director who has seen Moby Dick, "It's a wonderful picture. But the role of Captain Ahab gave Greg one of the choicest dramatic opportunities of his life, and he flubbed it. He's good instead of being great.

"As Melville wrote him, Ahab is a terrifying, vengeful man with a mind as twisted as his one-legged body. He's drowning in his hatred for Moby Dick, the white whale that cost him his leg and scarred his face. It's a role that calls for fire, sweep, unbridled emotion. But Greg simply is not up to it. The man just cannot let himself go. There's a weight, a stone inside of him that holds him down. It's not that he underplays where underplaying is uncalled for, it's simply that he cannot break the stranglehold inhibition has put on his emotions.

Actor in Gray Flannel

"In The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit, he is much better. Better because it's a case of type-casting. Gregory Peck happens to be by nature the actor in the gray flannel suit. He's stolid, conservative, hard-working. He gets $300,000 a picture, has organized his own production company, picks the best properties, hires a high-pressure press agent, insists upon the top directors, plays it cool and calmly.

"Technically, mind you, he's a darn good actor. But he's not in the same acting league with Brando or Donat or Steiger or Tracy or March or any of the really first-rate people. And in his heart I think he knows that."

A dramatics instructor, who taught him the rudiments of acting in New York 16 years ago after Peck had finished working as a World's Fair "talker" and a Radio City sightseeing guide, offers a succinct wrap-up of the actor's histrionic ability. "Peck's performances," he says, "are exactly like Peck — honest and workmanlike, humorless and uninspired."

The public, of course, views Peck differently. To the average film fan he represents a handsome cross between Abraham Lincoln and Gary Cooper. He is the romantic young American who dies gloriously or who surmounts all obstacles in a manner designed to stimulate the female while not antagonizing the male. He inspires confidence and trust.

As one Los Angeles theater manager puts it: "Peck's name on our marquee is the best box-office insurance we can have. Thousands of women in this neighborhood, I guess in every neighborhood, feel that here is one guy who would sooner chop off his right arm than cheat on his wife. He seems so romantically righteous."

The Hollywood View

In Hollywood, however, Gregory Peck the man is held in no such venerable light. He is considered an intelligent individual of quiet talent who lives within himself, a humorless actor who has few close friends, a wonderful father and a moody husband, an introvert who has never shared his pleasures or pains with the press or the public and never intends to.

When Alfred Hitchcock was asked if he knew or could recall anything warm or humorous about the actor, his reply was that Peck was "probably the most anecdoteless man" in the motion-picture industry.

Nunnally Johnson, one of this town's leading humorists, when presented with the same question, hedged with, "Greg is not a gag or joke man. His outstanding traits are integrity, honesty and conscientiousness. While these are not the most lovable or quotable characteristics, they are extremely admirable."

Women interviewers for the fan magazines report that it is easier to mine diamonds than to get quotable sentences out of Peck. Usually they approach a star and say, "Do you mind if I ask you a personal question?" Peck's stock answer is, "Not at all, if you don't mind my not answering it." Currently he refuses to let his new wife, 24-year-old Veronique Passani (left and cover) — whom, ironically, he met when she interviewed him in 1953 as a part-time journalist for the Paris Presse — be interviewed at all. As one result, precious little truth is printed about his private life.

Yet there are those who know him well and don't mind venturing comment. One friend, who attended the Neighborhood Playhouse in New York with Peck, says: "The only time I recall this guy ever letting loose, I mean giving vent to his feelings, was years ago in Manhattan, around 1940 or '41

"Let them have another, Mother, they're pure NABISCO cookies!"

His childhood was rugged. Maybe it explains the kind of man he is now when he was a struggling young actor. He was in love for a week with a very rich and homely girl. I think her name was Betty.

"Anyway, he was riding on one of those Fifth Avenue double-decker buses. He was on the top deck. All of a sudden he slid down the pole, to the bottom deck and started shouting, 'Look, Ma, I'm a blue-boid!' That saying was very popular at the time, and Greg felt so good, so much in love that he just had to sing it out.

"That's the only time I ever remember his being genuinely exuberant. Ordinarily he's a fellow who keeps his emotions under lock and key. When Greta, his first wife, was pregnant with Jonathan, their first child, Peck figured out five ways on the map he could rush her to the hospital when the time came. He's that kind of methodical fellow who always keeps himself in check.

"My own opinion is that he's been carrying a monkey on his back for years." (This phrase, originally used to describe dope addiction, has become a show-business equivalent for "something is bothering him.") "It may be that he has a guilt complex about straying from the Catholic church, which he did when he married Greta. Or it may be that he resents his father, who was an outstanding athlete while Greg was not. Or maybe the monkey can be found in his childhood . . ."

It all began in La Jolla, Calif., a section of San Diego. Born there April 5, 1916 — "He was a big baby," claims his mother. "Weighed 10 pounds" — Eldred Gregory Peck became the child of divorced parents when he was little more than 6.

Why Did They Split Up?

His father, Gregory, a former crack athlete at the University of Michigan who owned and ran a drugstore and captained the San Diego rowing team in his spare time, was a tall, good-looking pharmacist who somehow couldn't get on with his St. Louis-born wife. Some say the marriage foundered because Mrs. Peck had converted to Catholicism and then had come to resent the conversion. Of this, she herself maintains, "It's ridiculous gossip. Mr. Peck and I were just incompatible. Catholicism had nothing to do with it. One of Mr. Peck's brothers is a priest in Porterville, California. And my conversion was considered necessary by the family for our marriage."

Once the divorce was granted, in any case, Bernice Peck took young Eldred to Los Angeles. There she enrolled him as a resident student in St. John's Military Academy and got herself a receptionist's job in an advertising agency.

Of these formative years when he lived in military school, saw his mother on some week ends, visited his father on others, Peck understandably dislikes to speak. His father failed in business, later went to work for a drug house. His mother, living with a girlfriend to keep expenses down, earned very little money. At best, Peck's life was insecure and lacking in day-to-day affection.

At St. John's he was "an above-average student who liked to play baseball." One sister remembers him as "a little on the shy and moody side, tall for his age, with a high forehead, and his hair plastered straight back."

While still at St. John's, Eldred (he never called himself Gregory until he was 24 and had decided on an acting career) learned that his mother was marrying again. Her new husband, Joseph Maysucci (now Maysuch), took the family back to La Jolla. Eldred was sent to San Diego High School, where he played baseball, sang in the glee club and showed no dramatic ability whatever.

After graduation he enrolled in San Diego Teachers College. For two years he took premedical courses — his father wanted him to become a doctor — then quit to drive an oil truck and earn a few dollars. When he was told one day that after 20 years with the oil company he might earn as much as $300 a month, he followed his mother's advice, quit the job and returned to school. This time he enrolled in the University of California at Berkeley, where he waited on table, lived in an off-campus boarding house, went out for crew (making second string) and fell in love with a coed.

FIRST WIFE Greta is seen with Peck and their sons Jonathan (standing) and Stephen.

"When it came to girls," remarks a former college mate, "Peck knew nothing. Today, despite his position, I understand he knows only slightly more." ■

TEST YOUR

SOCIAL SECURITY IQ

by SIDNEY MARGOLIUS
EXPERT IN FAMILY FINANCES

It's your money — but what do you know about it? Congress is considering further improvements in Social Security — but do you know what benefits you are entitled to now? This quiz is designed to tell you.

Social Security undoubtedly is the average family's biggest financial asset, with a potential value of as much as $40,000 to $50,000 to some people reading this. But Cornell University researchers found that in a representative industrial city, Elmira, N.Y., four out of five wage-earners had only a poor knowledge of Social Security, and the Government reports that some people entitled to benefits fail to apply for as long as 10 years after they become eligible — losing out, in many cases, on badly needed payments.

So test yourself on the questions below. Have your wife try them, even your older children. For this is one quiz that really will win you a prize some day if you know all the answers.

On each question, check the answer you think is right. Correct answers are printed on next page.

ANSWERS

1 False. This is the most costly misunderstanding. Besides retirement benefits, Social Security makes monthly payments to the surviving widow and dependent children, or dependent parents, if a covered wage-earner dies.

2 False. You or your family must apply for payments.

3 True. Benefits are payable no matter how much savings or investment income you have. But there are limits on how much you can earn through employment.

4 True. A funeral reimbursement of up to $225 is payable to the spouse — or, if there is none, to whoever paid the funeral expense.

5 $200 a month.

6 True. The length of coverage needed to be fully insured for most retirement and survivors' benefits depends on the wage-earner's birthdate, ranges from 1½ to 10 years of covered work. But a widow with children under 18 can get payments even if the wage-earner was only currently insured; that is, had six calendar quarters of coverage within the three years preceding death.

7 False. Forty quarters (10 years) is the most anyone needs to be fully insured, but the amount you get depends on your earnings.

8 False. You must earn Social Security through covered employment. Social Security is often confused with the Federal-State old-age assistance program, which does aid elderly people in real need.

9 Sometimes. Dependent parents 65 or over can get payments if there is no widow or child eligible for benefits.

10 False. Unemployment insurance is a separate program.

11 True.

WOODEN YOKE with chains and hooks, such as Dutch settlers used to carry water pails in 1660, delights this young New Yorker in 1956.

HIDE of beaver, stretched on board, gets a "touch test." Dutch regarded furs as No. 1 item of trade.

'PLEASE DO TOUCH'

New York kids love this un-stuffy museum

NEW YORK.

One of the places local fourth-graders like most to visit is the Museum of the City of New York. Reason: They may TOUCH. Pictures here show how some of them reacted to this unusual privilege during a recent classroom call on the Museum's reproduction of a Dutch home in New Amsterdam in 1660.

Up to now, more than 18,000 children have roamed the "touch exhibit" — and left it intact. Says Miss Susan Lyman, of the Museum staff, who planned the exhibit: "We ask them to handle things carefully, and they do." Other museums please note!

"Those poor devils are dying"

Mustachioed, bulky and calm, Jack Philip stood on the bridge, watching his gunners pour fire into the Spanish men-of-war fleeing Santiago harbor.

A few days before, when another American ship had accidentally fired at the Texas, Philip had signalled: "Thanks, good line, but a little over."

Now enemy shells were whistling over his head from desperate vessels doomed to destruction. As the Texas raced past the flaming, riddled hulk of the Vizcaya, that Spanish battleship exploded.

Instantly, a great victorious shout sprang up on the Texas. But Philip quickly silenced it:

"Don't cheer, men; those poor devils are dying."

A bold captain who ran a happy ship, Jack Philip was something of a friendly hero to his men. But this one sentence, more than all his bravery, made him a hero of the Spanish-American War to millions.

What you should know about

OUTBOARD MOTORS

Here's valuable new information on America's fastest-growing outdoor sport

by EDWARD D. FALES, JR.

Late this month the nation's newest craze — outboard motors — hits fever pitch. By Memorial Day, U. S. lakes, rivers and coastal waters will be humming with an incredible 5 million outboards. That means one family motor for every 12 automobiles.

Three or four seasons ago, an outboard meant a cranky, noisy put-put that turned the lakeside air blue with bedlam. Outboards were known vulgarly but generally as "stinkpots," and were avoided by all but the most avid fishing (or racing) fans.

Today's motors, costing $80 up, are vastly different: silky quiet, clean, easy to start. Many are frankly styled and painted to appeal to women. They no longer fight back when you try to start them, or shake your teeth out when you do get going.

Soundproofed, "whispering" motors became popular just last year. Today, along with relative silence, you can have:

Nearly twice as much power (30 to 44 hp) as was common five years ago.

Twin engines. Most boats built today are strengthened to handle two motors.

Gear shifts. Old models jumped like a jackrabbit when they were started. Your new one idles in neutral until you're ready for it.

Reverse gears.

Easy starting. You can even have pushbutton or ignition-key starters if you want to pay extra.

Built-in pumps. If it rained in your boat last night, your motor will pump the water out for you.

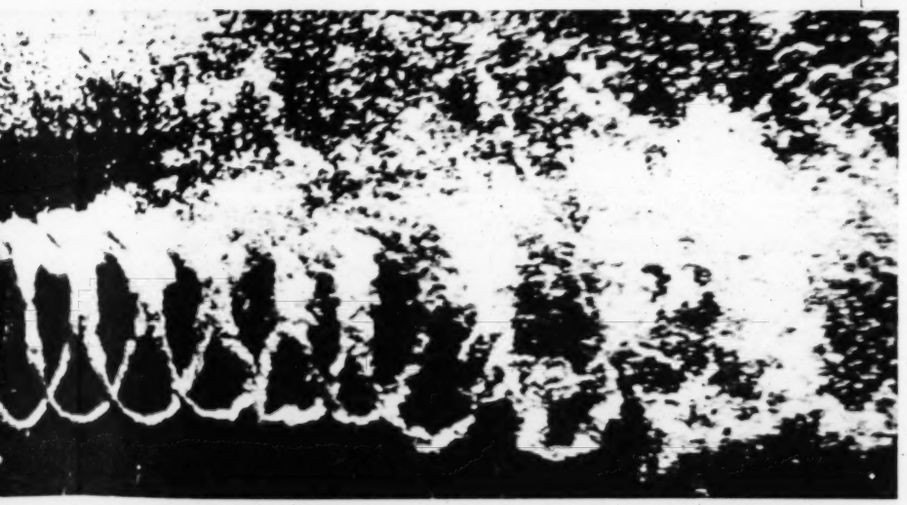

Remote control. You need no longer sit in the stern like a tail gunner to operate the engine. You sit up front with the family, start the motor there, steer with a wheel, shift gears, back up. Your gas lever looks like the knobbed "sticks" airplane pilots use.

Lift hoods. Replacing a sparkplug in some old motors was a problem. Today, you just snap the hood up to get at the works.

With this new luxury, boating has become the fastest-growing outdoor recreation in the U.S. (up 50 per cent in 10 years), and thousands of families have taken to the water for the first time. If you join them this summer, you'll discover an amazingly cheap, healthy way to have outdoor fun with your family. You don't have to buy a boat at first. Just buy a motor, tote it in your car and then rent a boat on any lake, river or bay you care to explore.

Even mothers who have never liked to fish will go along now.

Perhaps you already have a motor. Then you'll find it an advantage to do what many owners do now: buy a second. This gives you more power and speed, plus the same "twin-engined reliability" that planes have, in case one motor should quit. You can use two motors to get where you're going fast.

then run on one motor for fishing, water-skiing or lazy cruising, and return home fast (or run away from a storm) on two motors again.

But what kind of motor do you want? That depends on what kind of fun your family wants to have. It also depends on how much money you want to spend. Here are tips for motor shoppers:

Money: You can pick up a good used motor of medium power for $30 to $50. New, a middle-sized (7½-16 hp) job will cost you $200 to $360. Usually, motors can be financed over two years. When you're deciding how much to spend, figure how much you'll save by vacationing on the water near home instead of taking a long trip. Your motor may pay for itself in a single vacation.

Kind of fun you want:

1) If you're just bored with sitting around the house, try inland fishing or puttering around in a small rowboat or canoe. For this a 1.7 hp motor ($80) or a 3 hp motor ($125-$150) is ideal.

2) For plowing around in a small rowboat at 8 or 9 mph, get a 5 to 7½ hp motor ($164-$250). Eight miles an hour in a rowboat may not sound fast—but you feel like you're really traveling.

3) For family "runabout" fun, use a motor of 7½ hp or more in a boat specially designed to plane on the surface. These can be rented at most lakes. A 10 hp motor that whisks along at 20 mph might cost $240 to $321.

4) For overnight, week-end or vacation cruising, 15 to 40 hp gets you there fast. You may not want all your power in one engine. Two 10s make a good combination if you want to spend the money ($240 to $321 each). A 15 hp job might cost $335; a 30 hp, $462.

5) For high-speed cruising, deep-water lake or ocean fishing, you'll want at least one 25 or 30 hp motor. A 10 hp "spare" is desirable. Many skippers now use boats strong enough for two 30 hp motors. A trip that takes 30 minutes with 10 horsepower can be clicked off in 7 minutes with 30 horsepower.

Buying a Boat

What about buying a boat? As with motors, your choice is limited only by your pocketbook. A used rowboat may cost you $25, a new one from $75 to $150. For $250 you can get a 14-foot, fast-planing runabout. A 16- to 21-foot family cruiser may run $450 to $2,400. One excellent 18-footer, tough enough for use even on the ocean, costs around $1,200. This is the "stripped" price; a toilet will cost $60 to $100 more, and incidentals another $150. Boats, like motors, can be financed.

How fast can you go? With a 30 hp motor, an 18-foot family cruiser will skim along at 24 mph. With two engines, it will hit 30 mph.

Do you have to live on the water? No. Sales of motors and boats are booming in desert-dry Phoenix, Ariz. Owners drive to lakes 100 miles away to use them.

Where can you go? There are thousands of lakes and rivers, and thousands of miles of bays, sounds and inlets along the seaboard and the Great Lakes. Then there's Canada, which contains half the world's fresh-water lakes. Some inland lakes have hundreds of miles of shoreline to explore. Sample: newly-opened Bull Shoals Lake in the Ozarks. Its shoreline measures 1,050 miles.

Suppose you want to buy a boat of your own and take it along? Then buy or rent a trailer. Cost: $80 to $200. The new models are dressy enough to put behind the classiest car, roll smoothly, can be pulled at reasonable speed.

What does it cost to run an outboard? A 3 hp motor holds .7 gallons of gas and oil. (Practically all outboards run on regular or marine gas mixed with a little oil.) It will hum along for four hours for $1. A 15 hp cruising motor will run three hours on six gallons of gas.

How much maintenance does an outboard need? Practically none. You don't have to be a mechanic; many small boys keep their own motors in excellent condition by checking (or having them checked) once or twice a season. Wash and polish yours now and then. Lubricate it and clean the sparkplugs. Once a year, usually as cold weather begins, your motor should be "serviced." This costs about $7.50 unless you do it yourself. Once a year, you may want to screw in new sparkplugs. Small engines have only one, medium engines two, a few big models four.

What choice of engines do you have? This year there are about 105 models, and 19 or 20 makers.

Do you need boating experience? No. But have an experienced friend give you pointers and go along on your first couple of rides. Read a good boat manual. There are tricks to boating just as there are to driving a car.

Do you have to worry about getting "wrecked" or sunk? No. A boat, well-handled, is as safe as your home. Now and then your propeller may hit bottom. That's not dangerous. Most motors have "shear pins." These are little metal pins that snap when the propeller hits something, thus keeping the propeller from breaking. When this happens, you just paddle to deeper water, slip in another pin and go on.

When a Storm Comes

What about storms? Avoid them. Today's boats are tough, reliable, safe. But don't play with thunderstorms. Get ashore fast when dark clouds appear, even though they may seem far away.

Any other cautions? Yes. Don't drop your motor overboard. Sound silly? It happens. Learn the right way to attach motor to boat; once it's on, use a safety chain. Carry one life cushion (or jacket) for each person. Don't stand up, and don't allow hot-rodding.

What about "boat-camping"? Thousands of families are learning to do it. You can tie your boat to a tree, and tent ashore, or put up a "boat tent" in your boat. And many boats, of course, have cabins big enough for two adults and a child. You can rent camping equipment, but most outboard skippers buy theirs.

The only costs of a boat-camping vacation are for food, a few dollars for gas and some spending money. It's just about the cheapest vacation you can find. And it's fun! ■

Strawberry-Rhubarb Jam

Catch the sun-ripe flavor of fresh strawberries and rosy rhubarb in delicate jam of your own making

All the hard work and uncertainty of making jam or jelly disappeared long ago when natural fruit pectin was put on the market in easy-to-use liquid or powdered form. There's no more long boiling or "jelly test." And now, with new self-sealing half-pint jars, two more steps are eliminated: no need to stir the finished jam for five minutes to prevent floating fruit, nor to melt and pour paraffin. Today, making jam is one of the greatest joys of accomplishment the kitchen offers. And this Strawberry-Rhubarb Jam is a wonderful kind to try.

STRAWBERRY-RHUBARB JAM

1 lb. rhubarb	7 cups (3 lbs.) sugar
1 qt. ripe strawberries	½ bottle liquid fruit pectin

Slice rhubarb. (Do not peel.) Chop or crush strawberries. Combine fruits; measure 4 cups into large saucepan or kettle. Add sugar; mix well. Place over high heat; bring to a full rolling boil and boil hard exactly one minute. Remove from heat; stir in fruit pectin. Ladle quickly into hot sterilized self-sealing half-pint jars, leaving about ⅛" head space. Remove lids from hot water; place on jars. When all jars are filled, screw bands tight. Let stand 30 minutes; shake each jar gently to distribute fruit through sirup. Makes about six half-pint jars.

KITCHEN HINT:
When you use liquid or powdered fruit pectin, you must follow timing directions to the second for perfect results.

FROM PARADE'S TEST KITCHEN

WASH fruits thoroughly; be sure all utensils are clean. Wash and rinse jars and lids; drain. Do not peel rhubarb; cut stalks into half-inch slices.

STRAWBERRIES should be washed in ice-cold water before hulling. Chop or crush. Cover jar lids and bands with hot water and bring to a boil.

BEFORE cooking jam, remove jars and lids from water and drain. After jars are sealed, let stand 30 minutes. Then shake each jar gently.

Little Leaguer: WASHED

Thousands of boys like Bobby Anderson must drop their favorite game—unless adults help

DETERMINED Bobby looked like this as a Little Leaguer.

UP AT 13

by JOHN DEVANEY

DOLEFUL Bobby watches Little League drill. He idolizes Brooklyn's Gil Hodges, dreams of being a Dodger.

LINDENHURST, N.Y.

The grim fireballer at left is Bobby Anderson, a shy, soft-spoken boy who's got a problem no teen-age expert has ever been asked to solve: at 13, he's a has-been.

Apple-cheeked Bobby has been batted out of the pitcher's box by Father Time. In Little League games here last summer, Bobby's fast ball blurred by the hitters, his bat smacked the ball at a .360 clip. But this February he became 13 — "Boy, that was one birthday I didn't feel like celebrating" — and now he's too old for the Little League season that started this month.

To Bobby ("He lives for baseball," says his mother) and hundreds of thousands of other graduating Little Leaguers, that's much like having the world come to an end. Reason: In about three of every four communities with Little League baseball, there's nothing else in the way of a baseball program for kids below 16.

Made eager to play baseball by the Little League, boys like seventh-grader Bobby face an exasperating wait of three or four years before they can try out for high-school or American Legion teams. Yet there's nothing the Little League can do about it. Says Edward Kienle, a physical-education teacher in the schools here and head of the local Little League: "Our diamonds are two-thirds the size of a regulation field. That's fine for boys 8 to 12, our age limits, but keeping a boy over 12 on such a small field might hamper his development, besides not being fair to the smaller boys."

Not all American 13-year-olds are left

'There's not much fun for us in sandlot games after playing in the Little League'

off the bases. Two leagues for kids between 13 and 15 have sprung up since the Little League program swept the country after the war. One, the PONY ("Protect Our Nation's Youth") League, uses a diamond about three-quarters the size of a regulation field, takes boys 13 and 14. The Babe Ruth League plays on a regular-size diamond, is for boys 13, 14 and 15.

But of the 500,000 boys now in the Little Leagues, only about 150,000 will get a chance to play in a Babe Ruth or PONY League. There are fewer such leagues because of a crying shortage of adults to set up and run the leagues in their communities. Explains Kienle: "It's very difficult to get people willing to volunteer their time, especially since most of the adults who would be willing are already tied up in Little League work."

Unless a Babe Ruth or PONY League can be formed here in the next few weeks — and that's just a slim possibility — Bobby Anderson will spend much of this summer watching instead of playing.

"A lot of people," he says, "can't understand why us kids just don't choose up sides and play a game in a lot by ourselves — like they say they did when they were kids. But there's not much fun for us in sandlot games after playing in the Little League. It's not because we won't have uniforms either. In the Little League, if there was a close decision, the ump said safe or out and that was the end of it. But when the kids play among themselves, there's always arguments and pretty soon you get tired of arguing and quit.

"There's another thing, too. In the sandlot games you can't learn much from the other kids, but in the Little League you know you're getting taught right."

One of Bobby's friends, Frank Romanelli, also 13, puts it this way: "The Little League games gave you something to look forward to. At night, when we didn't have anything to do, it was fun just sitting around talking about the games."

Catherine and Stanley Anderson find it hard to imagine their oldest son (they have three other children) without baseball games. "Sports — baseball, basketball and football — are Bobby's only hobbies," says Mrs. Anderson. "He's on the honor roll at school, but his teachers say he'd get higher marks if he thought less about baseball. He talks baseball morning, noon and night. His father's a Giant fan, while Bobby's for the Dodgers. Every night at the dinner table there's a battle."

Bobby will play a few games this summer in a league run by the Youth Council, a Lindenhurst group that governs summer recreation. "The only trouble," says Kienle, "is that we don't have enough adults to act as managers and umpires. As a result, the games just don't have the same interest for the kids as the Little League and not near as many show up."

With the shortage of adults ("Too many parents are too busy making money to give time to their kids," growls one Little League official here), Kienle has had his hands full operating the Little League, never mind starting a league for older kids. All told, he needs from 70 to 75 adults to supervise the 320 Little Leaguers; each man gives up at least two or three evenings a week, and often Saturdays as well.

One man, though, thinks he may have a solution — letting older high-school boys serve as umpires, thus freeing adults for managing the teams and running the league.

"My son turned 13 this year," says Arthur Ryan, 45, a Little League volunteer. "Like Bobby, he's the kind you can't get into the house to eat because 'I'm up next inning.' I talked to a number of fathers whose sons were also too old for the Little League and finally got 10 who offered to help. We got information on how to set up a Babe Ruth League from some people who were running one in another part of Long Island. Then we contacted merchants and service clubs, who put up the money for equipment."

As plans now stand, Ryan hopes to start his six-team Babe Ruth League — using older teenagers as umpires — by the middle of this summer.

If Ryan is successful, Bobby and dozens of other boys here will be has-beens no longer. (The hope that he'll play again this summer delights Mrs. Anderson: "My husband and I have gone to see nearly every Little League game that Bobby's been in.") But Ryan believes that more than baseball is involved. "Being kept active in the summer is important for an energetic teenager," he says. "Saying a boy is washed up at 13 may sound strange, but it's our washed-up teenagers — the ones we've left with nothing to do — who become delinquents." ■

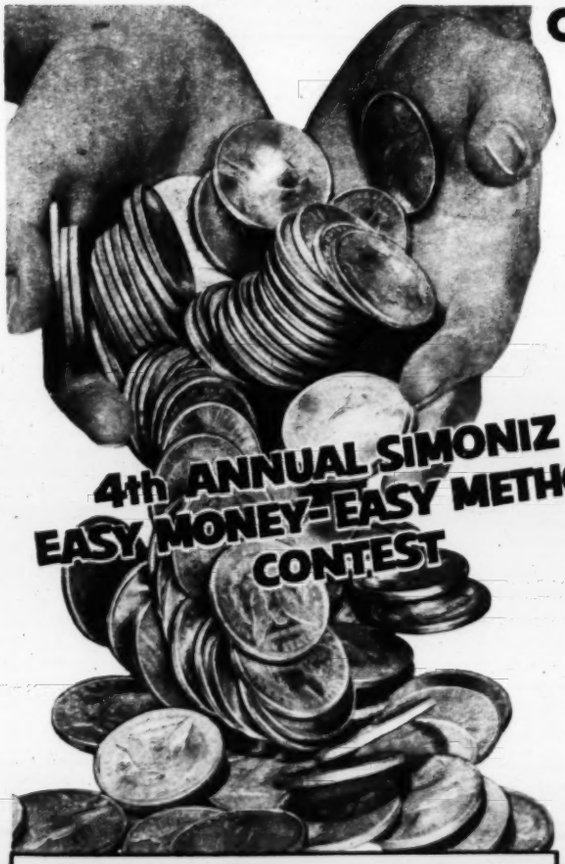

How you can help 'washed-up' kids

SURPRISED Bobby is told by Ryan (l.) and Kienle that Ruth League may start.

As Arthur Ryan and Ed Kienle (left) are proving in Lindenhurst, there's no reason why any boy should be deprived of the chance to play baseball. To set up a Babe Ruth League, you must have four to six teams, with 15 players on each team; the PONY League allows four to eight teams, with 16 players on each. For complete information, write to:

- Babe Ruth League, Inc., 524½ Hamilton Ave., Trenton 9, N.J.

TEEN-AGE TOPICS

There are no cut-and-dried rules for the handling of difficult social situations, but the truth generally is better than a "white lie" — although courtesy still demands that we do everything we can to save the feelings of others. Here are some recent letters on various topics:

Q. I am 15, and have been smoking for a year — without permission. My mother is by no means strict or old-fashioned, but there are some things she has forbidden me to do, and smoking is one of them. I hate to sneak cigarettes behind her back, but I know she would be mad if I told her. I need your help badly. — M.J., San Diego, Calif.

A. I suggest that you tell your mother the truth. Say that you are sorry you have been smoking without her permission; tell her frankly that you are going to continue to smoke, but don't want to be sneaky about it. Perhaps your mother, loving and kind as she is, will understand that if she does not take so firm a stand, then smoking may not seem so important to you, after all.

Q. A relative of ours uses our phone to make a number of long-distance telephone calls, and has never offered to pay us for them. How can we refuse further telephone privileges? — P.B., Somerville, Mass.

A. Your family should be frank and tell this relative that the telephone bills have been very heavy lately and ask if he could make a note of any long-distance calls that he places and ask the operator for the charges. If he doesn't take the hint and pay you for his calls, write him a note after he leaves, stating the amount that he owes on the bill.

Q. A girl in my class had a pajama party last month. I was invited, but my guardian would not let me go. Both boys and girls attended the party. Was this right? — D.J., Fairfield, Conn.

A. No. I think this was a tasteless kind of party for parents to permit.

Q. I am a boy of 13. Is it all right to write a girl pen pal as often as I want? — R.R., Quemado, N.M.

A. Yes, the boy may take the initiative in these things. However, the girl may feel he is overdoing it if he sends too many letters.

Q. I am a girl of 14 and go with a boy, 17, who is now in the Navy. My parents will not allow me to go out with him, although I am allowed to go out with other boys they have met. My pastor likes this boy. How can I make my parents understand he's a nice boy? — E.D., Long Beach, Calif.

A. From your letter, I gather that your parents and the boy have not met. Boys always should meet the parents of the girls they take out. Ask this boy to call on you at home; after meeting him, perhaps your parents will agree with your pastor.

QUESTIONS FROM READERS will be answered as space permits. (Miss Vanderbilt cannot answer letters personally.) Address: Miss Amy Vanderbilt, PARADE, 285 Madison Ave., New York 17, N.Y.

12 tips to reduce tension

by DR. GEORGE S. STEVENSON MEDICAL CONSULTANT, NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR MENTAL HEALTH and HARRY MILT

Do you feel tense, worried, anxious, worn out most of the time? Do minor problems throw you into a tailspin? Do you find it difficult to get along with people? Do you go around with a chip on your shoulder? Do the small daily pleasures of life fail to satisfy you?

If you answer "No" to all or most of these questions, you're lucky. And you might almost consider yourself an exception, because millions of Americans are subject to frequent attacks of tension and anxiety (we used to call it "nerves") — and hundreds of thousands are almost never free of this distressing condition.

Today might be called the era of "no peace of mind." Many people's tempers are short, their anxieties great, their lives charged with ever-increasing tension. For many, the simple pleasures of life are inadequate, and there is a drive for the thrilling, the unusual, the dangerous. Instead of contentment, many of us are filled with feelings of fear and suspicion, of being trapped, cheated, deprived — mistrustful of ourselves, mistrustful of others.

What can we do about it?

Often I have heard people say, "If only there were a peace-of-mind pill!" Unfortunately, there is no such pill. But there are many things — practical things — which you can do to gain relief from a tortured, anxiety-ridden state of mind.

Here are 12 suggestions:

1 When something worries you, talk it out. Don't bottle it up. Confide your worry to some level-headed person you trust — your husband or wife, a good friend, your minister. Talking it out helps relieve the strain, lets you see your worry in a clearer light.

2 Anger as a general way of behavior will most likely leave you feeling foolish and sorry. If your anger is provoked and you feel like lashing out at someone, try holding off for a while — let it wait until tomorrow. Meanwhile, do something constructive with your anger — pitch into some physical activity like carpentry, gardening or cleaning out the garage. Or you might even take a long walk. Working the anger out will leave you better prepared to handle real problems intelligently.

3 If you quarrel frequently because you feel defiant, remember: That's the way frustrated children behave. Stand your ground on what you are sure is right, but consider that you may be wrong. Even if you are dead right, it's easier on your system to give in once in a while. If you yield, others will, too. The result is relief from tension, a feeling of achievement.

4 If you worry about yourself all the time, try doing something for somebody else. You'll find this will take the steam out of your own worries and give you a feeling of satisfaction.

5 For people under tension, an ordinary work load may seem unbearable. But that is only a temporary condition. You can work your way out of it by taking a few of the urgent tasks and pitching into them, setting aside the rest for a time. Once in the swing of things, you'll find it wasn't such a "horrible mess" after all. The remaining tasks will go more easily. If you can't set some aside, maybe you are tackling too much.

TENSION
CONTINUED

Do you drive yourself or feel frustrated?

6 Some people worry constantly because they think they are not achieving enough. They seek perfection in everything — which is an invitation to failure. If you are such a person, put your major effort into those things you do well. Do everything else to the best of your ability. Give yourself a pat on the back for things well done, but don't try to break records in everything you do.

7 Some people feel frustrated or disappointed when another person does not "measure up." The "other person" may be one you are trying to fit into a preconceived pattern, or trying to make over to suit yourself. Remember, each person has his own virtues, shortcomings, values — and the right to develop as an individual. People who feel let down by the shortcomings (real or imagined) of others are really let down about themselves. If you are tolerant of your own shortcomings, you're likely to feel tolerant about others'.

8 When things go wrong, tense people often fly into tantrums. A more productive reaction is to recognize that things can't go well all the time — that disappointment and failure are part of life. It is much healthier to accept them and work on from there than to fly apart.

9 Sometimes, when things go wrong, it helps to escape for a while, to lose yourself in a movie, a book or a game. Making yourself "stand there and suffer" is a form of self-punishment as well as punishment of others. It is realistic and healthy to want to escape pain, so escape — but be prepared to come back and deal with the difficulty when you are more composed.

How Do You See Yourself?

10 Many of us often feel that we are being "left out," slighted, rejected. Often we just imagine that, when in reality, it is we who are deprecating ourselves. Instead of withdrawing, it is much healthier and more practical to continue to "make yourself available," to make some of the overtures, instead of always waiting to be asked.

The opposite reaction to withdrawal is to push yourself forward on every occasion. This often is misinterpreted and may lead to real rejection. There is a middle ground between "withdrawal" and "pushing." Try it.

11 Many people drive themselves so hard that they have little time for recreation, an essential for good physical and mental health. Thus driven, they may find it hard to make themselves take time out. For such people, a set schedule — definite hours during which they will not work but will engage in recreation — is helpful. In general, it is desirable to have a hobby which is absorbing and provides pleasure.

12 Those under emotional tension often feel they "have to get there first" — to edge out the other person, no matter how insignificant the goal. If enough of us feel this way (and many of us do), everything becomes a mad race. There can be no peace of mind, only fear, suspicion and hostility, in this kind of atmosphere. But the urge to edge out the other fellow can be controlled. Destructive competition is contagious, but so is cooperation. When you give the other fellow a break, you make things easier for yourself. If he no longer feels that you are a threat to him, he will stop being a threat to you.

One final point: Each of us is responsible for the other person's peace of mind. Troubled people are people in trouble. Many of the harmful things they do arise from fear, worry, emotional immaturity. In a troubled world, the least we can do for each other is to help with sympathy and understanding. ■

WHEN THE DOCTOR SAYS,

"No Salt!"

If your doctor has said, "Cut down on salt," you know how flat and insipid unsalted foods can be. Millions of Americans are discovering that a few drops of fresh lemon juice (itself virtually salt-free) transform tasteless, unsalted foods into delicious, appetizing ones. The taste of salt is replaced by the wonderful sharp tang and aromatic flavor of fresh lemons.

Overweight? Many reducing diets recommend cutting down on salt. Seasoning with fresh lemon instead of salt not only helps you shed pounds faster, but a squeeze of tangy, fresh lemon sparks low-calorie foods. Ask your doctor.

Refresh without filling

NOT LEAST of the modern girl's rewards for taking such care of her appearance is that it makes people happy—just to look at her.

Her greatest charm, her slender figure, is easy to look after. For her up-to-date taste for the lighter foods guards her waistline—as well as her health.

Today's Pepsi-Cola goes right along with this sensible trend in diet. Reduced in calories, never heavy, never too sweet, Pepsi-Cola refreshes without filling.

Have a Pepsi—the modern, the light refreshment.

Prince Valiant

IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

BY HAROLD R FOSTER

Our Story: EARL JON AND HIS MEN ARE BALKED IN THEIR THIRST FOR VENGEANCE. "WHAT GOOD CAN COME OF SLAYING HELPLESS PRISONERS? ASKS PRINCE VALIANT. "THEY DID BUT FOLLOW THE COMMANDS OF A CRUEL AND RUTHLESS LEADER. THEY WILL KNOW THE KING'S JUSTICE!"

THE PRISONERS ARE SET TO WORK LOADING THE SHIP WITH THE PLUNDER THEY TOILED SO HARD TO BRING ACROSS THE MOUNTAINS.

THEN, TO THEIR SORROW, THEY ARE SENT UNDER GUARD TO RETURN THE WAY THEY CAME, TO RETRIEVE LOOT ABANDONED ALONG THE TRAIL.

GUNDAR HARL, THE CRIPPLED BUILDER OF SHIPS, AT LONG LAST RECEIVES HIS REWARD FROM VAL: "NOW THAT GUNNAR FREYSSON HAS GONE TO HIS DUBIOUS REWARD, I GIVE YOU THIS FIEF TO HOLD IN THE KING'S NAME!"

TREES ARE FELLED AND TIMBERS HEWN. EARL JON'S HALL WILL BE RESTORED ERE WINTER COMES, FOR NEVER DID MEN WORK HARDER THAN THESE PRISONERS. THE MEN THEY HAVE SO SORELY WRONGED STAND GUARD WITH BITTER EYES AND READY WEAPONS.

ALETA HAS LONG SINCE RETURNED TO VIKINGSHOLM; FOR WHAT PRETTY WOMAN WANTS TO PROLONG A VISIT WHEN ALL HER FINE DRESSES ARE BURNT TO ASHES?

AND VAL COMES HOME TO A WORRIED WIFE. "PRINCE ARN IS WITH THE KING, PLANNING A FEAT BEYOND HIS YEARS. PLEASE RESTRAIN HIM!"

HAL FOSTER

"YOUR MAJESTY, THE FERTILE VALLEYS MY SIRE DISCOVERED ARE USELESS WITHOUT A ROAD. GARM AND I WISH TO FIND A WAY FOR THAT ROAD!"

"AMASA DISCOVERED THE TROUBLE. NO ONE HAD TOLD THEM WHERE WE WERE GOING. THEY THOUGHT THEY HAD BEEN TRICKED AND WERE TO BE SOLD INTO SLAVERY!"

"SOON THEY WERE CONVINCED OTHERWISE AND GOT BACK TO WORK WITH A WILL! 'WE'RE GOING TO EXPLORE THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS.' AMASA EXPLAINED TO THEM."

LANCE

"HULL BAND O' NO-COUNT APACHES" AMBUSHED HIM AND SWIPED HIS HOSSES, BIG FALLON SAYS—NOT BOTHERING TO EXPLAIN WHY THEY LET HIM LIVE TO TELL ABOUT IT. NOW, WITH LANCE AND BLAZE, HE SETS OUT TO MAKE THE THIEVES REGRET IT/

THEY HAVE A LOT OF GROUND TO COVER. FALLON KEEPS HIS COMPANIONS AMUSED WITH BLOODY RECOUNTS OF THE FEROCIOUS BATTLE HE PUT UP BEFORE THE APACHES FINALLY OVERPOWERED HIM BY SHEER WEIGHT OF NUMBERS.

AT DARK THEY REACH THE SPOT OF AMBUSH AND MAKE CAMP....

"WOT'CHEW NOSIN' ROUN' FER?" FALLON ASKS LANCE.

"INDIAN TRACKS. I CAN'T FIND ANY. AND I DON'T SEE ANY SIGNS OF THE BIG BATTLE/"

"CLEVER PEOPLE, THEM INJUNS. THEY KEM BACK 'N' KIVVERED THINGS UP!"

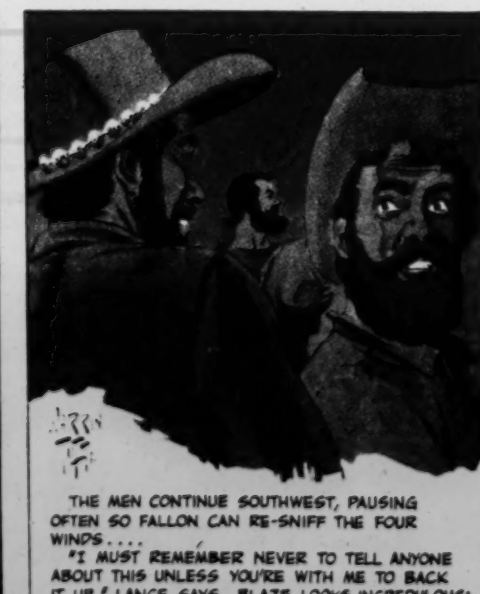

IN THE MORNING THEY FIND THE TRACKS OF FALLON'S HORSES....

BUT EVENTUALLY THE TRACKS END ON ROCK. "WELL, THAT DOES IT," LANCE SAYS. "NO IT DON'T!" ANSWERS FALLON.

STANDING AS THOUGH IN DEEP MEDITATION, BIG FALLON CLOSES HIS EYES AND TENDERLY SNIFFS THE AIR NORTH, EAST, SOUTH AND WEST. HE SNIFFS SOUTH AND WEST SEVERAL TIMES AND FINALLY CONCLUDES: "SOUTHWEST!"

THE MEN CONTINUE SOUTHWEST, PAUSING OFTEN SO FALLON CAN RE-SNIFF THE FOUR WINDS....

"I MUST REMEMBER NEVER TO TELL ANYONE ABOUT THIS UNLESS YOU'RE WITH ME TO BACK IT UP," LANCE SAYS. BLAZE LOOKS INCREDULOUS: "WHUT MAKES YOU THINK I'D BELIEVE IT?/"

Lawrence Welk

"Just Kept Plodding" Until Tapped for TV

By Virginia Irwin

A Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch

NEW YORK, May 19

EACH WEEK the television dials in nine and one-half million American homes are tuned in to "The Lawrence Welk Show" (KSD-TV, 11:15 p.m. Mondays). This pleases and still surprises bandleader Welk who plodded along for 25 years with only modest success until television tapped him for nation-wide fame.

"I think I can safely say that more people listen to my music during a single hour network show on TV than heard my orchestra throughout my whole past career," says this one-time North Dakota farm boy whose "Champagne Music" has brought family dancing back to the living room. "There were the early years of playing for school and small-town dances that drew anywhere from 25 to 200 people. There were at least 10 years on the road when we played nothing but one-nighters. I think we played more one-nighters than any band in the business. We just plodded along."

REAL SUCCESS caught up with Welk only last summer. Playing on a local Los Angeles program, he was signed for a six-week test on the ABC-TV network. Show business weisenheimers said he'd never make it. His show didn't have any gimmicks. What it needed was some big, splashy production numbers to hold audience attention. Welk refused to "smarten up" his show. He just went along playing good dance music and featuring Alice Lon as his singer, and week by week his audience grew. At the end of his sixth week, his sponsor took a look at the ratings and signed him to a long-term contract.

On a recent visit to New York for a special appearance at Madison Square Garden, Welk recalled some of the amusing experiences of his barnstorming days. On one occasion, he said, all of the members of his then six-piece band left him. They said he was nothing but a farmer and would never get anywhere in the show business. There was another occasion years ago when he and his orchestra played in St. Louis. A newspaper critic wrote that Welk's "champagne music" reminded him not so much of champagne as of flat beer.

"Nothing ever stopped me for long," Welk said. "I just kept on plodding along."

BORN ON A small farm near Strasburg, N. D., Welk inherited a love of music from his father, who had come to America from Alsace-Lorraine in 1878. One of eight children, Lawrence mastered the accordion as a boy and at 15 was playing for community dances and church affairs. At 21 he left the farm and went on the road as a soloist playing a new instrument known as a piano-accordion. Eventually he formed an "orchestra" consisting of only drums and an accordion, and later he added a piano and saxophone. His group played under such names as "The Hotsy Totsy Boys" and "The Biggest Little Band in America."

All along Welk dreamed of "a new kind of sweet dance music" and eventually hit upon the idea of a tempo that he believed was "gay and exciting, a beat that people can dance to, something sparkling, bubbling, like champagne." Welk enlarged his orchestra, regrouped his musicians, and introduced new arrangements, then went off barnstorming. By the 1940's he was doing fairly well. There were engagements at the Aragon Ballroom in Ocean Park, Calif., and at the St. Francis Hotel in San Francisco, short film subjects, many recordings. Then four years ago he started a television series from the Aragon which started as a four-week engagement and rapidly rose to a berth among the top ten video programs in Southern California. Now going into his fifth year at the Aragon, Welk plays there five nights a week, in addition to his network program. A second one-hour TV show is planned for him in the fall.

ALTHOUGH A BONA FIDE celebrity in Hollywood—and such a drawing card that the ballroom grossed $1,486,000 during his first 100 weeks—Welk has put on no Hollywood airs. He lets the orchestra direct itself while he steps down from the stage to dance with elderly women.

Married for 25 years to a nurse he met back in Yankton, S. D., Welk is the father of three children — Shirley, who is married; Donna, in college, and Larry Jr., 15 and still in high school. Welk wants his children educated because he himself never went beyond the fourth grade.

Welk regards himself as "just ordinary folks."

"At 53," he grins, "I'll never become a personality kid. I'm just a bandleader who likes to play good dance music that I hope will keep on pleasing the folks."

Bandleader Lawrence Welk enjoys whirl with singer Alice Lon.

The Television Letter Box

Letters Intended For This Column Should Be Addressed To Television Editor, TV Magazine, Post-Dispatch, St. Louis 1, Mo.

"A NIGHT TO REMEMBER" was well worth its repeat showing on KSD-TV. It was an outstanding, momentous presentation. Factual drama, it not only carried an atmosphere of disaster, but it showed the character of man in his complacency, self-assuredness and selfishness to outwit the sea. A lesson for all, to long remember.

STEVE CONCOVICH,
Granite City, Ill.

My family and I wish to thank KSD-TV for the time being given to "The Way of Life" on Sunday mornings.

Thanks to KWK-TV for the Christian Science program on Sunday mornings. I look forward to this each week.

I have been enjoying television programs but regret such an overdose of mysteries, murders, etc. Surely the listeners do not prefer these programs to a beautiful musical half hour of Liberace. I have heard so many guns firing that I feel they will descend on me any minute.

I always wanted pictures of television and movie stars. Now with the TV magazine I don't have to send for them. I get them every week.

Studio Notes and Gossip

A NEW quiz show, "20 Steps to a Million," with a million-dollar jackpot, will be produced soon by CBS-TV which already has signed a sponsor. Monty Hall, a Canadian, will be the master of ceremonies. . . . Charles Coburn has appeared in 12 TV shows, 10 radio shows and two motion pictures in the past six months. "I'm doing this," said the 79-year-old actor, "in order to put some money away for my old age." . . . "Wide Wide World" may be an evening show next season. . . . Bishop Fulton J. Sheen's time on TV is always against strong competition on other networks. His first season he bucked Milton Berle, then he was opposite Groucho Marx, and now it appears that next season he'll be on at the same time as "I Love Lucy" . . . NBC-TV is reviving plans to star Imogene Coca in "Happy Birthday." . . . Nanette Fabray says she "probably" will star in "High Button Shoes" her old Broadway musical hit, when it is produced by NBC-TV next fall. . . . Tony Bennett, and not Peggy Lee, will be the third summer substitute for Perry Como. The others are Patti Page and Julius LaRosa . . . George Gobel's writer-producer, Hal Kantor, may not be with Gobel next season—money matters . . . NBC says it will send "a TV glamour girl" to the national political conventions to advise women delegates on makeup, clothes and camera angles.
